According to the men who have formed themselves into the East Moors Early Leavers' Group, the corporation told the unions in September, 1977, that they would be prepared to offer money substantially more than statutory redundancy to close the plant earlier than planned.

The action alleges that the unions did not let all the men know of the possibility of increased payments, and that they accepted redundancy under the impression the plant would remain open for another three years.

When the plant shut some workers who remained until the end received payments of more than £15,000, but others who left just weeks before the shutdown got only £4,000.

A Cable Bill dealing with the services is expected to be introduced in the Commons before Christmas, Mr Leon Brittan, the Home secretary said when announcing to the Commons the Government timetable for the legislation.

As soon as both Houses of Parliament had debated the White Paper, the Government would invite applications for two kinds of licence: licences for up to about 12 new cable pilot projects which would make a significant contri-bution to new cable technology, and licences for existing cable operators to start providing new programme services on their cable systems. The Government would also make notes of guidance available to potential applicants. As a number of groups were already in an advanced stage of planning for new cable systems and had tad two months to prepare since the White Paper was blisheed, it would ask for pplications would be assessed by Department of Trade and Industry and by the Home Office, and it was hoped that decisions inted by November.

Over the same period the Government would also be granting icences of additional services on existing systems, although it would not impose a final date by which hose applications should be eccived. While the Bill was before Parliament the Government honed to set up the cable amhority in a shadow form to give advice on the supervision of the new cable services which might then be in

Bill to modernise law on parochial charities

HOUSE OF LORDS

The Parochial Charities (Neighbourhood Trusts) Bill, a private member's Bill for the amalgamation of parochial charities for the poor into neighbourhood trusts, which fell with the dissolution of Parliament at the election, was again presented for second reading by Lady Faithfull (C) in the House

She recalled that when the original Bill was discussed the Government, while not wholly in sympathy with it had agreed to a second reading and accepted a recommendation that a Lords select committee should be set up to look into the position of parochial charities for the poor in England and Wales. She understood this position was unchanged. There were 140,000 registered

Their endowments brought in millions, yet at present, with a few notable exceptions, they were largely a wasted asset. The European Council recently agreed that concrete steps should be taken to ensure effective control of agricultural expenditure. One of the principal sources of friction which has been upsetting relations between the United States and India was resolved yesterday to the appar-ent satisfaction of both sides.

After a day-long series of meetings here between Mr George Shultz, the US Secretary of State, and his Indian counterpart, Mr Narasimha Rao, a settlement was announced in the dispute over the supply of spare parts for the nuclear power station at Tarapur outside Bombay.

According to the formula announced by Mr John Hughes, the Assistant Secretary of State, India will seek the spare parts it needs outside the United States. If it fails to find a satisfactory supply, Mr Hughes said, President Reagan has decided that he will take the necessary actions to supply them from America. Another issue between the Frightened teenage army awaits attack

From Robert Fisk. Jdita. Lebanon

Mr Yassir Arafat's last holding transistor radios to outpost in the south-western edge of the Bekan Valley is held by 40 teenagers, some of whom possess automatic rifles and most of whom are frightened. They are surrounded by Syrian troops and were last night waiting to be attacked by the ever-growing army of Palestinian mutineers who have blasted their way into almost every Palestine Liberation Organization base across the floor of the Bekks. "Do you think there will be a battle tonight?" a boy of perhaps 15 asked as he tried to offer us coffee in that desperate sort of way that people adopt when fear and politeness fill their mind at the same time.

Richards v Richards

Before, Lord Haitsham of St Mary Bone, Lord Chancellor, Lord Diplets, Lord Scarman, Lord Bridge of Harwich and Lord Brandom of Oakbook [Speeches delivered June 30]

A prajority of the House of Lords held that the power of the High Court and county courts to order a spouse to vacate the matrimonia newas derived from section 1 of the Matrimoial Homes Act 1967 and was to be exercised only in accordance with the criteria laid down in section 1(3); the needs of any relevant children was one consideration but not the paramount one. Guidance was given on the practive and procedure to be followed on an application for an

Their Lordships on the facts of the case unanimously allowed an appeal by the husband, Mr Gordon Villiam Richards of Wareham Dorset, from a decision of the Court of Appeal (Lord Justice Cummin Bruce and Lord Justice Dillon) (The Times December 8, 1982; [1983] 2 WLR 633) who dismissed an appeal by the husband from Judge Pennant, sitting as a deputy High Court judge at Weymouth, who, on the application of the wife, Mrs Christine Norma Richards, ordered the husband to leave the matri-

Section 1 of the 1967 Act, as amended by section 3 of the Domestic Violence and Matri-monial Proceedings Act 1976, provides: "(1) Where one spouse is cruitled to occupy a dwelling house ... and the other spouse is not so entitled, then ... the spouse not so entitled, then ... the spouse not so entitled shall have the following rights (in this Act referred to as Tights of occupation? Despite the petition the parties continued under the same roof for some months. The wife moved into a separate bedroom and went out a good deal in the evenings. In June 1982 the wife left, taking the children with her, and went to live in a house eight miles away in Swanage in conditions which were admittedly overcrowded. The wife took the children to stay with the father from time to time. and control.

In October 1982 the wife issued a summons, intituled in the pending suit, seeking, inter alia, an order sun, seeking, inter data, an order that the husband quit the matri-monial home and not return thereto. At the hearing the judge found that the wife had no reasonable ground for refusing to return to live in the same house as the husband, but that her existing accommodation was overcrowded He added that her assertion that she husband was simply not true. He said: "I think it is throughly uniust to turn out this father, but justice no longer seems to play any part in this branch of the law." Faced with conflicting decisions of the Court of Appeal in Samson vi Samson ([1982] 1 WLR 252) and Myers v Myers ([1982] 1 WLR 247) he followed Samson and concluded that he would have to grant the order sought in the interests of the children. However, he did not order that the husband should not return.

The Court of Appeal dismissed the husband's appeal, but what was happening was that the wife occupied the house from Monday to Friday and the husband from Friday to Monday. The childern were permanently in the house and were looked after by the parent in occupation. The husband had no difficulty in looking after them.

It was perfectly clear from the facts, the judge's findings and the subsequent events that the wife had never made out a case for excluding the husband from the home. Although their Lordships were unanimous that the appeal should independently of that point of principle, from which Lord Scar-man dissented.

LORD BRANDON said that the Court of Appeal recognized that there was a conflict of authority in which ouster orders should be granted. According to Myers and Elsworth v Elsworth ([1980] 1 FLR 245), an order should be refused unless the wife had reasonable unless the wife had reasonable grounds for refusing to live in the same house as the husband. According to Samson, where there were children whose welfare demand that they be looked after by the wife, the welfare of the children was the primary consideration.

It was with growing astonishment, as the citation of the authorities had proceeded in argument, that their Lordships had found that for the most part they either to the statutory powers which enabled courts to make ouster orders at all, or to the statutory principles which governed the exercise of such powers. It theref fell to the House to do what the courts below had signally failed to do, and to examine the statutory Before 1967 the only power of the High Court to make an ouster order was the general power to grant injunctions in section 45(1) of the Supreme Court of Indicature (Consolidation) Act 1925 (now section 37(1) of the Supreme Court Act 1981), it had been held that under the section the court court court of the section the section the section the court of the section that the section the section the section the section the section that the under the section the court could only grant injunctions to protect legal or equitable rights.

Until radical social changes in recent decades, the whole estate in a matrimonial home, both legal and equitable, was normally vested in the husband. However, a wife not disqualified by a matrimonial offence had common-law right to be provided with a home to live in by her husband, and the High Court had made ouster orders to protect that right see Silversione v

Silverstone ([1953] P 174). However Parliament did not regard that limited right of stection as adequate, and the 1967 Act was passed as a result. Experience of its working had revealed various weaknesses which were remedied by section 38 of the Matrimonial Proceedings and Prop-erty Act 1970, sections 3 and 4 of the 1976 Act and section 1(1) of the Matrimonial Homes and Property

It was the intention of Parliament in passing and later amending and extending the scope of the 1967 Act that the power of the High Court to make, during the subsistence of a marriage, orders relating to the occupation of a matrimonial home, including in particular ouster orders, which had previously been derived from the 1925 Act, should thereafter be derived from and exercised in accordance with the

The county court ouster order power, previously derived from the general provisions of section 74 of the County Courts Act 1959, were be allowed, there was a difference of common as to the ground. His Lordship agreed both with Lord the 1967 Act. Although county be exercised on the principles in the 1967 Act.

The wife's application was therefore in substance one for an order under section 1(1) of the 1967 Act, and the court was required to have regard to the four matters specified in subsection (3), in naking such order as it thought just and reasonable.

It was important to appreciate that none of those matters was made of more weight than any others, let alone paramount over them. The weight to be given to any particular one depended on the facts of each

It followed that the decision in Samson, that it was not relevant to consider whether the applicant wife had reasonable grounds for refusing to return to the matrimonial home while the husband was still there, was in direct conflict with section 1(3). The conduct of a wife who had no such reasonable grounds but nevertheless asserted that she would not return was clearly "conduct of the spouses in relation to each other

The approach in Samson came very near to treating the needs of any relevant children as a paramount matter overriding all others. That approach would be justified in a case to which section 1 of the Guardianship of Minors Act 1971 applied, including in particular a case in which the custody or upbringing of a child was in upbringing of a child was in question.

However that section (re-enacting in like terms section 1 of the Guardianship of Minors Act 1925), only applied where the custody or upbringing of a child was directly in question. It did not apply where such matters only arose incidentally in relation to other matters which were directly in question.

were directly in question.

Since both the judge and the Court of Appeal failed, in exercising their discretionary powers under section I of the 1967 Act, to have section 1(3) required them to do the orders of both courts would have to

An expedited hearing of the suit was clearly required, and it might well be sensible not to disturb the arrangement worked out between the parties in the meantime. However the husband should not be compelled against his wishes to accept a continuation of that

The practice had grown up, when applying for an ouster order during the pendency of a suit, to issue a summons in that suit. It had also become the practice to ask in such summons for an order requiring the husband to vacate the matrimonia home and not to return to it. Those practices might be convenient, but the first was in conflict with the relevant rules of court, and the second with the terms of the 1967 Act as amended.

It followed from rules 107(1) and 104 of the Matrimonial Ca Rules (SI 1977 No 344(L6)) that the only correct way of initiating an application for an order under section 1 of the 1967 Art, whether there was a suit pending or not, was by the issue of an originating to the Rules with the heading "In the matter of an application by under section 1 of the Matrimonial Homes Act 1967." The situation in the county court was similar to that in the High Court: see rules 4 and 2 of Order 47

The form of order asked for should so far as reasonably practicable follow the wording of section 1 as amended. In the case of an ouster order, it was an order (1) declaring the applicant's rights of occupation of the matrimonial home and (2) prohibiting the respondent from exercising any right to occupy such home from a cified date and time and mail

All the section 108(1) of that Act, and accordingly fell to be taxed under Case III of Schedule D as being the established a priority. The courts below were correct in adopting that me of the trustees.

The Court of Appeal so held in However, it was demonstrable on the evidence that the ouster order reserved judgments dismissing an appeal by Mr David Buckley Sharp and other trustees of the Orwell Share Settlement from a decision of otherwise, was clearly wrong on his provisional findings of fact. The Court of Appeal fell into the same Mr Justice Walton in November 1981 who allowed an appeal by the Crown from a determination of the special commissioners and had estoned an assessment to income tax made on the trustees for 1972-73 in an amount of £460,065.

LORD JUSTICE FOX said that section 108(1) provided that tax under Schedule D was to be charged on the annual profits or gains accruing to any person residing in the United Kingdom from any kind of property whatever. By section 109(2)(b) tax under Schedule D was to be charged under Case III in respect of "all discounts".

Accordingly two questions fell to be determined; first, was the £460,065 a profit arising from a discount received on a discounting transaction? Second, if it was such a profit, was it an annual profit or gain within section 108? It had to be a profit of an income and not of a

The transaction that gave rise to the receipt of the £460,065 was the purchase of the note by the trustees in February 1970. That was a "discount" transaction within the stated definition. The trustees acquired the note before maturity at an amount less than its face value: that was a plain case of a discount in a commercial sense.

Was, then, the profit on the discount an annual profit or gain? In Brown v National Provident Institution the profit on treatury bills (substantially in the form of promissory notes), whether arising or sold prior to maturity, was held to be taxable as profits on discounts. In that case it had been contended by the taxpayer that the profit was a capital profit. The House of Lords

of Arabia

In barely a decade the Arab and ultimately non-oil based world has undergone an impressive physical transformation. Skyscraper cities have been set down where once mud settlements stood, Metalled roads have been thrown through the empty sands and across remote mountains. Water piped from the sea and desalinated in huge, modern plants has been used to turn the

Moreover, the process is not complete. Despite alarmist talk in the West of an Arab return to austerity - of a "building bonanza gone bust" - huge changes are still being wrought, albeit at a less frenetic pace than in the 1970s.

The Middle East then resembled, in the words of one British contractor, "one giant construction site". For a time the amount of work being carried out was limited only by the speed at which men and materials could be mobilized Money was no problem.

The Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (Opec) was the magic carpet upon which the revenues and aspirations of the Arab world suddenly soared. During the 1970s oil prices rose by 1,200 per cent. The income of the Arab producers climbed from $4,500m in 1970 to $73,000m in 1978 and $204,000m in 1980. Receipts for the decade, according to Yusif A. Sayigh, a leading Arab economist, totalled almost

According to the International Monetary Fund, construction spending accounted for more than 10 per cent of gross domestic product throughout the 1970s, but when spending in related sectors manufacturing and mining, health and education, electricity, water, transport and communications - is included, the proportion is much higher. In Saudi Arabia, for example, investment was growing at a minimum of 30 per cent a year

Second, the glut, East, both by big oil producers of oil on world markets brought such as Saudi Arabia, Iraq, the a sudden plunge in Arab a sudden plunge in Arab revenues, as both production and prices fell.

By 1980 Opec - dominated by the Arab producers - was running a surplus of $109,000m. Two years later the estimated deficit was $18,000m. Kuwait had seen revenues slashed by more than half to $9,000m in 1982; Libya's oil income fell from $22,600m to $10,000m. Elsewhere, similar cuts were recorded. The turn-around in fortunes came as a considerable shock. But its significance should not be exaggerated. Although Libya especially in the traditionally has spoken of leading its people poorer countries (usually the back to the desert if necessary, so-called "high absorbers" with most of the Arab nations have big populations), on upgrading sufficient reserves to withstand health facilities. Equally, huge Arabia alone is estimated to sums were used to create the basic infrastructure – roads, ports and communications – assets are believed to be worth.

All this, combined with overtly poetic forms used at Dubai Airport (Page and Broughton), Riyadh Airport, and the famous Kuwait watertowers, seemed to support a move towards a modern form of what is now called "regionalism". That perception could well have been just the wishfulthinking of people whose view of much new building in the Middle East is unfavourable. Those not active in making money out of it have noted the absolute lack of architectural context for new development, resulting in a townscape sometimes looking like a mini-Manhattan, and more often, a suburb of Marseilles. Foreign workers are still needed

In 1975, 1,649,000 migrant workers were reported to be under contract in the capitalrich states of the Middle East. By 1985 it is expected that this figure will rise to about 3,000,000.

In spite of the general slowing in growth rates, such countries as Saudi Arabia, the Gulf Emirates and Libya will continue to require foreign labour, initially for further construction projects but in the longer term for services, maintenance and the operation of growing indigenous industrial capacity.

During the boom period of the 1970s, particularly in the construction sector, most of the migrant workforce consisted of Arabs from capital-poor states such as the Yemen Arab Republic and Egypt and, of course, from the Palestinian diaspora. They and some others accounted for more than 70 per cent. Those from the Far Fast were a mere trickle, less than 1 per cent. Today the situation has changed completely. The migrant Arab labour force has made way for a big influx of Far Easterners, largely from India, Pakistan, Philippines and South Korea. Far Eastern labour is cheaper and has been brought in by contractors from the region who have won contract after contract since the second half of Another interesting aspect of lahour in the Arab world is that many of the more highly skilled Arabs have been encouraged to stay at home. The sudden flow remittances from migrant workers and generous aid payments from the oil-rich states have fostered construction activity in countries such as Egypt, Jordan and North Yemen. If the present trend towards the employment of Far Eastern labour continues, pre-dictions are that by 1985 the population working in the tinue LABOUR capital-rich states of Saudi Arabia and the Gulf.

Yet another significant factor is the changing requirement for labour. In Saudi Arabia the economy is now becoming more sophisticated and the country's needs more demanding. Labour requirements strongly emphasize highly trained, technical, skilled and professional qualification and experience. These criteria apply to domestic as well as imported

There have been numerous predictions of the likely rate of increase and optimum size of the the Middle East. Forecasting is a hazardous occupation, particularly for a region as volatile and unpredictable as Arabia. The World Bank's figure is four million by 1985. The facts do not support this idea, except perhaps for Saudi Arabia and Libya, where indigenous popu-lations are small and development potential still enormous.

in many other countries precise requirements continue to change and the rate of increase to decline. In Kuwait, for example, much of the infrastructure is complete and unambitious. More significant is the strict enforcement of immigration and residence laws, a policy being followed with varying degrees of severity by governments in the rest of the Gulf. This is a symptom of a creased since the Iranian Revolution. While curtailing any substantial increase in migrant manpower, the tighter regulations are unlikely to imperil the continued existence of labour markets in the Gulf. At every number will certainly equal, if level the shortage of nationals not overtake the Arab migrant in the labour force will con-

Apart from the Far East and the Arab region itself. Turkey is perhaps the only other country with a big manpower stake in the capital-rich countries of the Middle East.

The extraordinary growth of Turkish activity in the region is underlined by estimates of the number of Turkish workers sent there. Between 1961 and 1967 the total was a mere 434. By September 1982 it had risen to 175,920, of which more than 100,000 were in Libya.

It is said that the volume of international expertise being used in the Middle East has peaked. If that is so, a time may come when client and architect should pause to reassess exactly what they wish to achieve there. is there any demand to reflect an indigenous culture, and to produce identifiable places with their own character? Or is the demand to produce more pieces of nowhere: places without any inherent identity, quality or

If character is wanted, there is no doubt that international architects would be able to supply it - but a context has to be given. That context will probably not be the odd parliament building or zoo, but what the Americans call "downtown". The question therefore for the next few years is whether downtown in Kuwait, Dubai, Sharjah, Riyadh, Baghdad and Abu Dhabi should all look and feel alike: or whether inherent character could be rediscovered and nurtured.

The pattern has continued with the announcement that total state spending in the 1983/84 budget will be limited to about $75,000m.

The symptoms of the slowdown have begun to appear with increasing frequency in the past six months: payments on many contracts are being held up and several projects are being delayed or scaled down and rebid. This trend seems unlikely to be reversed until the world oil glut ends and the kingdom's oil output recovers to former levels.

Over 40 years C.A.T. has changed -along with the rest of the Middle East.

The Middle East has changed dramatically, especially in recent years, and C.A.T. has played an active part in that change.

In forty years, projects in the region have increased in size and technical complexity and our policy has been to extend our capability by keeping up with the latest technological advances in the industry.

In some cases we have led the way.

In pipelining, for instance, we were the first Middle East company to lay 24 inch diameter pipelines-then 36 inch-and 48 inch-and 52 inch - and 80 inch!

As further technological advances are made, C.A.T. will continue to keep pace with them, to maintain our reputation for technical standards and punctual completion, and to go on growing as we have done in the pastfrom an annual turnover of £1 million to £160 million.

If you're looking for a contractor who knows the region well, and has a wide network of local contacts, think of us.

Delegations of international contractors now visiting Iraq requests for their clients' payment deferments than new orders. At the beginning of 1983, a number of contractors were informed that there was no longer enough cash to meet foreign currency payments and were requested to offer credit payment terms.

Iraq has been unable to meet the heavy financial burden imposed both by the war with Iran and by its economic development programme, and despite its reputation for meeting payments on time, at the start of this year some companies were still awaiting foreign currency payments due in October 1982.

Many of these companies were working on contracts awarded during 1981, when determination continue development despite the war resulted in orders worth some $23,000m (£15,000m). In October 1981, Kier International, a member of Britain's French Kier Holdings, was awarded a $210m contract to build a section of expressway in Baghdad in a joint venture with Mussad al-Saleh & Sons, a Kuwaiti contractors.

In February this year, the ioint venture was advised that the client was unable to meet future foreign currency ments and was advised to find funding for the client. "A request from a government client to a contractor to arrange the funding of a project after contract award is unique in my experience," Mr J C S Mott, French Kier's chairman, said in his annual statement. As a result, Kier announced an extraordinary pretax provision of $12.7m in its 1982 group

Attempts by the Export Credits Guarantee Department (ECGD) to reach agreement with Iraq on rescheduling commercial debts amounting to about $230m have so far proved unsuccessful. Two other British firms are involved in orders of $100m upwards - John Laing International, which has a $143m road and bridge building contract in Baghdad, and Paterson Candy International, which is working on a $126m subcontract for the Karkh water scheme, also in the agencies from other countries have also been embroiled in Iraq's cash-flow problems. Hermes of West Germany, has to extend credit agreed provided certain conditions are met, primarily that Iraq must meet all outstanding foreign and local currency payments due in 1982, as well as all local currency payments due in 1983.

German companies particularly attracted by the contracting opportunities on offer in 1981, a period when there were increasingly few openings in their own market.

Details of oil shipments as part repayment of outstanding debts are now being discussed by the French Government. France is expected to lift about four million tonnes of Iraqi crude this year to help meet arrears on both military and civil contracts; total foreign currency payments falling due in 1983 in the latter sector are estimated at about $1,223m.

The immediate future for contractors looks grim as Iraq's current account deficit seems likely to continue for the next two years and there are few of the war ending.

A decline in oil prices and production in the past two years has taken its toll of development spending in almost all Opec countries. Libya has been no exception; its 1983 development budget has been cut by about a tenth to 2,370m Libyan dinars (about £5,000m).

Simpson, of course, was fated to die on Mont Ventoux in his quest to win the Tour five years later.

Last year, the London-born Austra-lian Philip Anderson finished fifth after wearing the coveted mailiot jaune for half the race. It is a meagre record compared with the French, who have provided 32 Tour winners, and the Belgians, with 18.

This week, however, Europe's most respected cycling magazine poses the question: "Without Bernard Hinault, the suspense in the Tour de France is total: Anderson, Zoetemelk, Kelly, Roche, Van Impe.... who can win?" Zoetemelk and Van Impe have each won a Tour de France, and are named more for sentimental reasons than by sporting logic. Anderson and the two quarter of a century.

All three are dedicated, enthusiastic, confident performers. Anderson, in particular, is no respecter of reputations. The four-time winner Hinault - absent this year because of knee trouble - describes the Australian as the only rider who has posed problems for me in the past two Tours".

This rangy, inelegant pedaller is enjoying the best of his four years as a Continental professional. In April, he became the first Australian to win a modern day classic (the Amstel Gold Race, in the hilly part of Holland); in May, he finished, voluntarily, second to team colleague Stephen Roche in the testing Tour de Romandie, in Switzerland; and last week, in the south of

The Australian is continually perfecting his knowledge of his sport, and of himself, he possesses the immense physical reserves and deep moral qualities required of a winner of the Tour de France.

The same can be said of Sean Kelly, the angular Irishman from Tipperary, who has undergone a metamorphosis in the past 15 months. In his first five years as a professional, 1977-81, he acquired the tag of a sprinter, a man who could show a turn of speed at the end of a race but who could neither climb well nor race alone against the climb well nor race alone against the clock (time trialing).

The turning point was the final stage of the seven-day Paris-Nice race in March last year. To win overall, Kelly had to go faster than the French race leader in a time trial that was all uphill to the summit of the Grande Corniche road from Nice.

In last year's Tour de France he established a commanding lead in the points classification (using his sprinting ability at stage ends) before reaching the first mountains on stage 12. Kelly climbed well enough to keep with Hinault and Anderson over the 5,610ft Col d'Aubisque, and the Irishman outsprinted the small leading group to win the stage, his fifth such success in five Tours. He lost time in subsequent mountain stages, mainly because he was conserving energy to defend his green jersey (the maillot vert) as points leader. He won this competition by a record margin (429 points, against the 152 of Hinault), but also showed his staying power by finishing an excellent eighth in the final time trial.

At the end of a successful season, Kelly went home from his Brussels lodgings to the family farm near Carrick-on-Suir to marry his teenage sweetheart and to unveil a plaque in what is now known as Sean Kelly Square. For 1983, maybe the year that Kelly could win the yellow as well as the green jersey in the Tour de France, his French-based Sem team has been reinforced by the signing of three firstrate climbers: Agostinho, a Portuguese, Grezet, a Swiss, and Rooks, a Dutchman. These three were largely to win the Tour of Switzerland. Some observers have said that Kelly has reached top form too early, and that he will fade away during the second part of the Tour, but an enforced six-week rest in April and May, following a heavy crash in the Tour Midi-Pyrenees, will have con-served the physical and mental reserves necessary to win a Tour de France.

At 23, Stephen Roche is four years younger than his compatriot, and is making his debut in the Tour de France. Why, then, is he cited as a potential winner? He is the prodigy of continental

All the stages after Bordeaux will be of importance, but the most decisive should be Pau-Luchon (10), with the French capital, with the traditional prologue time trial. Each of the 140 starters will race alone around a hilly, round-the-houses loop, with Anderson, Grezet, Kelly, Roche and Anderson all four most famous Pyrenean passes; Roquefort-Aurillac (13), a route of narrow departmental roads on which three post-war Tours have been looking for a confidence-boosting ride. The three-and-a-bit miles will have decided; the time trial up the extinct little bearing on the remaining 2,363 miles that follow during the next three volcanic peak of Puy de Dôme (15), where Bahamontes clinched the 1959 Tour, and, potentially the most gruelling of all, the eight Alpine passes This modern-day odyssey has all kinds of pitfalls designed into the 22 of stage 17, ending at L'Alpe d'Huez.

a year, 200 to 250 kilometres a time. Most professional cyclists burn themselves out in about four years. You couldn't survive without drugs. Some people don't survive because of them. Tommy Simpson was killed by drugs. Plenty of others, too."

For the present, though, these dreams of riches and nightmares of self-extinction are remote.

The municipal council of Boulogne-Billancourt provides ACBB with a flat for the riders in a tower block. Akam and Flood live there, rent-free, with three French riders and 10 bicycles. Like any flat shared temporarily by five young men, theirs is mildly revolting to the stomach and the senses. Fetid thermals rise from the dark corners of rooms crowded with single beds and bicycles, mingling with thick old fumes from the kitchen. All the walls of the flat are decorated with posters in colour of cyclists in motion. The flat is a shrine to Phil Anderson, who was until recently himself a member of ACCB: he is the proof that the dreams need not be in vain.

"Phil Anderson lived in this very room," said Rick Flood, reverently opening a door. "That's Phil," he said, pointing to a poster of a tanned man with the face of a driven demon, riding a bicycle and wearing a yellow pullover.

Would you think, I asked them, that all your sacrifice and hardship had been worthwhile if you got to wear the yellow jersey? They looked horrified. as if some unutterable impiety had unanimity. "You don't know what you're saying. The yellow jersey? That's the ultimate dream. You can't let yourself even think about it. It's hard enough even to get a ride in the Tour, let alone to get placed in a stage.

TIME TRIALS

Bitter experience has taught me that if you come across a crowd in the street watching men erect cameras, put up watching men erect cameras, put up lighting on scaffolding, and wave mikes around, there is only one sane thing to do: hurry on past. Nothing ever happens during filming. The most you will see is worried people discussing what should be happening and then taking a tea break because it hasn't happened. Watching films is fur; watching filming is watching nothing.

Ten years ago a film scene was being shot outside my flat in Notting Hill, something with Yul Brynner in I was told. I went ourside like a fool and watched for 40 minutes. Nothing I came back in and went on typing Some time later I became aware that someone was leaning on the garden wall, watching me. I looked up. It was Yul Brynner. He was clearly so bored that he had been driven to waich the only sign of activity in the area. So my feelings on the inadequacy of filming as a spectator sport have carried me through life. Until last Friday, that is. Last Friday I went to York by train. I had forgotten until I got there that York is a great railway town. I don't just mean that most of the buildings seem to be owned by British Rail, or that they have streets named after George Hudson, the railway king. I mean that after Thomas Cook in London had sold me the wrong ticket, and the ticket collector at Kings Gross had charged me extra, the staff at York spotted that I had been overcharged at Kings Cross and volunteered a refund. That's what I call a great railway town. To make things even better, there was a fully coaled-up steam engine in the station, so after checking in at the station hotel, I went back in to see what was up. What was up was some filming going on Lights, cameras, make-up people and about a hundred actors in 1940s sear. The platform by the steam train was jampacked with wartime extras - khaki soldiers with rifles, sailors in full rig, old style bobbies, mums with schoolchildren. evacuee kids, men in bow-tie and baggy suits. I bet the young Roy Hattersley was among them somewhere. In my vaguely post-war rig I felt quite anachronistic.

It was, in fact, The Dresser being filmed. There sat Albert Finney in a chair marked "Albert Finney", looking elderly. There stood Tom Courtney in a brown suit looking worried, though I think he always tends to look worried, not necessarily because he hasn't got a chair marked "Tom Courtney".

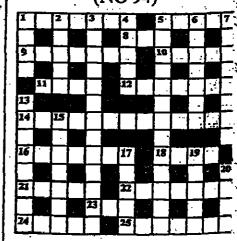

They finally got around to shooting a scene which involved the train coming in stopping and disgorging a select handful of British stars, so it was at least worth it to see a steam engine move. At first all you could see was smoke behind the trees, then a great big black ex-LMS engine appeared and snorted its way up-Platform 6, exhaling quite unnecessary steam for the camera's sake.

"I hope it's bloody well going to stop," said a 1940s voice behind me. We all laughed. The furny thing was, it didn't. At about 5 mph it ploughed into the buffer and took it with it, then stopped convulsively, no doubt giving a few British actors a great shock. There was a silence. Mr Finney sat motionless, the crashed train a few yards:

"Bloody hell," said the 1940s voice, very 324 impressed. Some worried-looking men gathered and discussed what had just happened. I decided to leave. Better to, quit while you were ahead, when something had actually happened.

Later that night I tiptoed back into the station to have a last look. You'd never have guessed that film people had been. there, especially not shooting a major film with Albert, Tom, Edward and all the others with tank-engine names. Nothing disturbed the calm except the Scottish sleeper train gliding in and gliding out again. But there on Platform 6 the buffer was still ripped away from the line, living proof of the only train crash I have ever witnessed. I have now modified my theory to state that nothing ever happens during filming except when things an extraculative wrong Maybe it things go spectacularly wrong. Maybe it is worth waiting, after all.

They might as well be in prison: it that a marathon runner would expect would probably feel like a holiday. The in a season." inmates of the harshest detention centre endure no greater physical hardship nor more material depri-vation than do Rick Flood and David Akam in the life they have chosen. But their indefinite spell of back-breaking slavery is self-imposed...

They are cyclists, road racers, members of one of France's top amateur teams, Athletic Club of Boulogne-Billancourt (ACBB) in Paris. Flood, 24, from Bendigo, north of Melbourne, was a member of the Australian team which won the silver medal in the 100-kilometre race at the Commonwealth Games. Akam, 22, grew up in south London and was national junior champion of Britain over 25 miles and in pursuit. They both joined ACBB as a means to display their talents to the managers of France's professional teams.

Because many riders from its lists have graduated to the European professional circuit, ACBB is known as a nursery for professionals. "More like a slaughterhouse, I'd say," Rick Flood observes. At the beginning of this ridges of fresh tissue. "This was the year's competition season, in February, worst," he said, raising his shirt and year's competition season, in February, 15 foreign riders were in the ACBB team. ACBB expects them to ride in races about 20 times the load of competition less to enjoy themselves in Paris. about the same as a plumber or of professional riding, 120 to 150 races dying for."

The physical perils of these exertions are extreme. "You've got to watch out for the bonk," says Akam, striking his forehead with the heel of his hand. The bonk" is a sudden collapse of the blood sugar level, instantly bringing on delirium and delusion. The cyclists may use up to 6,000 calories during a race; to stave off "the bonk" they nibble constantly from small snacks in the "bonk-bags" they all wear.

As dangerous as "the bonk" is the behaviour of other riders, desperate to stall or unseat their rivals. "Team-cycling is the most vicious sport," says Flood. "I was so green before this season. I didn't know a fraction of the tricks they can pull."

Rick Flood has crashed nine times this season. "Over the bars. Under the joking. bike. Carved up by the pack. Skidding on wet, muddy cobbles in February. Gravel's the worst. It takes so much skin away, especially from elbows and knees." While he spoke, Flood's hands passed over the scars on his body livid rents, purple craters and long gingerly rolling down the waistband of

Their meagre allowance is supplemented by the cash prizes that they can win in races, up to a limit of $500 a race (the financial arrangements of "amateur" cycling in France are indeed mysterious).

Akam had won seven races by the end of April, when a mysterious intestinal illness stopped him racing. Flood has won three races and been placed many times. Their successes attracted the attention of professional team managers, and both have been you've never heard of it. The very top riders in France today, the Tour winners, might be earning more than £100,000 a year.

The price of these earnings is desperately high. A surgeon using a modern laser can often save the sight if the patient reports for treatment before too much damage has been done.

As the need for treatment is so urgent, he suggests that any elderly patient who complains of distorted or blurred vision, of objects appearing too small or of the disturbing symptom of straight lines appearing bent should immediately be sent to an ophthalmic casualty

Hearts awry

The sudden death of Caroline Bradley. the popular and apparently fit horsewoman, is thought to have been due to the development of a cardiac arrhythmia, a condition where the electrical impulses which control the regularity of the heartbeat become so disorganized that the heart becomes uncoordinated and loses its ability to act as a pump. Miss Bradley is one of over 300,000 people who die from various forms of heart disease every year. The cause of her particular trouble, sudden cardiac death, is usually due to an arrhythmia known as ventricular fibrillation.

Although many patients with long standing or acide coronary artery disease do die suddenly from ventricular fibrillation, cases where hüherto fit persons die suddenly without much, if any, evidence of coronary heart disease are also comparatively common. This con-dition is being studied at the Rayne Institute at St Thomas' Hospital,

Dr D J Hearse, the research teamleader, said this week that they were passionately interested in solving the passionately interested in solving the problem as to why otherwise healthy individuals should suddenly develop ventricular fibrillation, particularly as the disaster is apt to occur away from a hospital where the normal rythm could be quickly restored and life saved. Their research suggests that ventricular fibrillation is related to coronary aftery spasm. It seems to coronary artery spasm. It seems likely to occur when blood returns to the heart muscle after the arterial spasm has relaxed.

Snakes and ale

Apparently Theakston's is now chal-lenging Federation as the beer North Country Members of Parliament drink as a nightly reminder of gins and loyalties. But to many doctors the name Theakston means venom, not beer, for Dr David Theakston, son of a former managing director, forsook the brewery to read 200logy and is the Liverpool scientist to whom doctors refer their questions on snakes.

Dr Theakston is phlegmatic about news of an increased number of adders on the east coast, for, he says, nobody has died in Britain from an adder bite for six years. Most British hospitals now stock Zagreb-made serum which is both very effective and pure. In the past, the fear of inducing a severe allergic reaction had curtailed the use of scrum. If the usual precautions are observed, however, the new refined form is comparatively safe.

Vocal strains

Although Mr Neil Kinnock is unlikely w*elcome* thought should inat should copy the Prime Minister in anything, doctors are suggesting that he would be wise to follow her lead and take advice on voice production. Both have suffered from vocal strain. A throat specialist attributes this to a tendency they have to force their voices, particularly when competing against background noise or when suffering from a cold. If the voluble Mr Kinnock is going to make so many speeches, he would be well advised not only to have speech therapy, but also to make more effective use of a microphone.

Bramwell was actively working in the Army when he was only 14 and, as the eldest child of busy parents, Catherine not only looked after the little ones but was out visiting the homes of the sick and the drunk by the time she was 12. She was spared the mantle of succession because her father was forced to resign when he was 71. It is a matter of sorrow to and Florence Booth had seven the family, and Catherine has added

"When we were children, Cath took our parents' place and if she said 'no' that was it", Dora says. Things haven't changed much over the years because, when Dora had a heart attack a few years ago and lay in bed for three weeks. Catherine appeared in her room. "Dora, I want you up in the morning. If you just go on laying there you'll become a vegetable."

The sisters relish an argument and can keep one going for days. "You disagree but you don't fall out," Dora explains. Catherine, like the first-born in any big family, is adept at "winding up" the other two but, she says: "They are not only my sisters, they are very good friends".

The colonel and the senior major exist for their commanding officer. They monitor her interviews (not too many at a time in case she tires), they type out her manuscripts and

A few weeks ago, Olive arranged a birthday party in the parish hall for 200 people and the commissioner made a rousing speech. "I want you all to know that I'm in love with living and if I live to be 101 I'll be glad."

A loyal voice from the audience called out. "I'm hoping you'll go on until you're 105."

Battles with a beetle

Stegobium paniceum is a topic I would hesitate to raise in company. Like a sexually transmitted disease it is best kept out of sight and mind. In fact Stegobium paniceum is a reddish brown beetle barely 2mm in length whose larvae live in dried plants, dry bread and almost anything in a domestic foodstore. For two years my wife and I have been plagued by them. We first spotted them in a jar of white bread flour. There soon followed other sightings. Soon they were everywhere. The cracked wheat, kept in a screw-top jar was alive with them, an unopened packet of dried mush-rooms had been infiltrated. Our baby's breakfast cereal became flour bins were blighted again. Infected food was thrown away Flour drums were repeatedly emptied and spice jars discarded. No container was impenetrable, not infected, spice jars fell prey and the even screw-top glass jars.

Now our strict regime of inspecting all food carefully and destroying any that is suspect, of storing fresh supplies in airtight containers and of maintaining a quick turn-over of produce has achieved relative success. We have not seen a beetle for two months.

Our local environmental health office confessed the Stegobium paniceum was a new one on them and advised a liberal use of insecticide. Experts at the Natural History Museum were less reticent about the bread beetle, as they call it, and less enthusiastic about the insecticide. Go into any home, they said, and you will find either furniture, bread or carpet beetle. These past months, for my wife and I. have been long, bitter and at times embarrassing. After all, beetles and bugs are, in the public mind, associated with dirt, And our success at ridding our house of this monster may be short lived. The Natural History Museum also said that Stegobium paniceum is part and parcel of the environment and that it would be extremely foolish to believe we could ever rid ourselves of the pest completely. Stegobium paniceum is here to stay, but not, I hope, in my larder.

some non-controversial additions, is certain to go through, but not It is designed to end the so called system. The clearly impractical objective of the 1973 Matrimonial women with children are disadvantaged in the job market, nor the single parent organizations who claim that more than half of lone Causes Act, that the courts should try to leave both parties in the same position as if the marriage had parents depend on supplementary continued, is abandoned. Now 40 per cent of married women work, benefits. Neither does it satisfy the divorce reformers who suspect that the maintenance changes are still ex-wives would be encouraged to be self sufficient where possible - the courts would be able to award fixed cosmetic and the conduct clause truly destructive.

It certainly does not appeal to the likes of the Married Women's Association whose chairman Mrs Juanita Frances says: "It's a law against women designed by men to protect themselves." She argues for keeping maintenance as a wife's

The promoters of the original bill have uttered many soothing words about removing the grosser in-equalities in the present system of maintenance without hitting the older married woman who has never worked, not the younger ones with children to support. But Mrs Frances and her members, who have already lobbied MPs, are not the only ones suspicious of what the men are up to.

The single parents' groups who squashed the first Bill, are still pretty hostile. "We were very upset about women being branded as 'alimony drones' by the Law Commission and the media" Jane Streather of One Parent Families, says. "You got the impression that there were all these ladies lolling around living comfort-ably off their hard pressed husbands. The truth is that over half of lone parents are dependent on supmentary benefits.

"Now we want to work construc-tively with this new Bill to stiffen up the rights of the children. At the moment the provisions are very vague - it looks like window dressing while the real purpose is to reduce the amount of maintenance If, as the pro-divorce reform lobby contends, these fears are vastly overdone, how do you get around the fact that women who leave their jobs to have children, particularly now with high unemployment, are permanently disadvantaged in the job market com-pared with men? "Women's wages are still way below men's," says Robbie Robson of 'Gingerbread' the single parents' group. "so even when a child has grown up, there should still be some recognition that the caring parent has given up some But a first wife's right to maintenance frequently impinges on the plight of second wives and their financially overburdened husbands that convinced Lord Hailsham, the Lord Chancellor, to introduce the reforms in the first place.

The single parent groups may claim that the alimony drone is a myth, but the reasonably well heeled middle class husband has probably borne the brunt of the present divorce laws. He can, after all, be divorced against his will, losing his wife, his children, his house and a sizable chunk of his income for life into the bargain.

Mrs Yvonne Moffatt of the Campaign For Justice in Divorce, which has lobbied for reforms, thinks the Bill is better than nothing. 'It will help some of our members. depending on how the new provisions on maintenance are inter-preted. But I think it is misguided to cling on to the old concept of maintenance, even though women are disadvantaged in the job market.

"What women ought to be doing is pressing very hard for the Government and industry to change their ways, provide more part time jobs at higher levels, creche facilities, job sharing and better retraining facilities."

I'm-partial

The new issue of The Listener bites the hand that feeds it hard enough to draw blood. In a second article on broadcasting from Northern Ireland, Peter Lennon reports that there is only one broadcast journalist in the province with senior editorial rank who is not an Ulster Protestant. The exception is Stephen Claypole, the BBC's editor, news and current affairs, fourth in seniority. He is English. Lennon asked all the broadcasters whether they considered the root cause of conflict in the province sectarian, social or political. All placed "sectarian" first (two preferring to call it "tribal sectarian"), with the sole exception of Claypole whose order was political, social and sectarian". The Listener, with that impartiality for which the BBC is wont to be famous, notes at the bottom of the rage that Lennon is "of Southern irish Catholic upbringing".

I should think the Queen has to suffer enough without The Health Express, a free sheet given away in Holland and Barrett health food stores, infringing the convention that her name is not used to advertise. According to Health Express, at any rate, nine new homeopathic remedies constitute the system of medicine that the Queen carries with her on every royal trip". The nine branded products are for insomnia; rheumatic pain, lumbago and sciatica; hay fever; mental or physical tiredness; indigestion and digestive disorders; colds and influenza; haemorrhoids; and skin problems. Squatting MPs

It is notoriously difficult for parliamentary new boys to fit in. With the difficulty in finding rooms at least two groups of the pushier matters into their own hands, and gone squatting. An aristocratic duo, Colin Moynihan (Lewisham East) and the Hon. Thomas Sackville (Bolton East) have set up camp with Jonathan Sayced (Bristol East), who modestly decided that the room he had obliged Tony Benn to vacate was too grand for him to occupy alone. George Walden (Buckingham), Jeremy Hanley (Richmond), Francis Maude (Warwickshire North), Antony Baldry (Banbury) and Peter Lilley (St Albans) have similarly appropriated an office in Palace Chambers. I will let you how if the bailiffs call.

The association, which campaigns for organic farming, says it is outraged at the "disgraceful and fraudulent" use of the words. Staying put

I am sorry to disappoint the Conservative freshers (and one or two older hands) who rushed to ring Capital Radio, after reading my column yesterday, to apply for Robin Squire's job as Conservative contributor on the programme Party Pieces, Squire, newly appointed PPS to Linda Chalker, the Transport Minister, has now been given a dispensation by his new boss to continue his pleasingly unsycophantic contributions for the time being.

dably subdued since the election debacle last month, but two key conferences next week will see them emerging from the shock and spoiling for a fresh fight.

The miners, meeting in Perth, and the Transport and General Workers, in Douglas, Isle of Man, are keen to demonstrate that the drubbing their party got at the polls has not diminished their self-confidence or biunted their sense of purpose. If the. labour movement still has a cutting edge, it is to be found in the NUM and the TGWU.

Mr Arthur Scargill, the pitmen's left-wing leader, will sound a rallying cry in his presidential address on Monday. He is characteristically undismayed, insisting: "Amidst all the gloom and despondency that one can see in the trade union movement I am looking very optimistically and with a great deal of confidence towards the future.

"It is my honest assessment that out of the present economic and political crisis we shall see the development of a struggle that will lead us into a far wider-ranging arena than ever right or left even contemplated."

Tough words, but can Mr Scargill get the miners to back him? He was twice worsted by his own members in the pithead ballot box last winter, when they rejected industrial action over pay and pit closures. But he persists in believing that the colliers will rise again.

putting an emergency motion to the conference proposing an intensive campaign in the coalfields to acquaint the miners with National Coal Board plans to shed as many as 65,000 jobs over the next few years. This would be followed by yet another strike ballot "at the appropriate time".

Asked when that would be, Mr Scargill replies sharply. "When we can win". The customary time for balloting is around September or October, when the NCB makes its final pay offer. This year is likely to be no exception, and the industry is expected to be in ferment after the formal takeover of the coal board chairmanship by Mr Ian MacGregor on September 1.

The miners have also changed their stategy on wages. Instead of asking for huge percentage cash increases, in a package claim that carries insufficient credibility with the men, the militant areas are proposing a demand for "substantial" increases, which will leave the union with room for manoeuvre.

Pitmen settled for 6.5 to 7 per cent on earnings last November, at a time when the Government was seeking a 3.5 per cent ceiling on public sector settlements. Ministerial pleas for "wafer-thin" increases of 2 to 3 per cent in the next wage round are sure to fall on deaf ears in money militancy has not really been tested for a decade - since the big strikes of the early 1970s. They have either accepted voluntary restraint to support a Labour government or been bought off by above-the-norm increases. Should the coal board and the Cabinet take a tough line on pay, they might just deliver Mr Scargill the majority he needs for a strike.

The Scottish miners who are putting up the pay policy motion argue that it demonstrates that "the NUM is determined to pursue its democratic right to bargain for improved wages and conditions", a sentiment that will be heavily endorsed by the 1,200 TGWU activists attending the transport

While some moderate union leaders hint strongly that the TUC should adapt to political reality and engage in serious discussions with Mrs Thatcher's second-term govern-ment, the TGWU will make a powerful public declaration of its traditionally hard-line policies.

The transport workers will reject moves to water down the union's commitment to free collective bargaining - a policy which pre-sumes that there is money to negotiate about, not just a pre-determined limit of 'x' per cent. Their influence across a wide spectrum of industries and services, ranging from the docks to hotels, will pull reluctantly behind the TGWU many unions whose leaders prefer the wage restraint.

The TGWU is regarded by the left as the bulwark that will stop the rot of political uncertainty that has followed the election result. The union's predominantly left-wing executive is plainly not attracted to the newly fashionable retreat to the right being offered by such figures as Mr Gatin Laird, general secretary of the engineering workers.

Mr Waher Greendale, the TGWU hard-left president, taking the chainfor his first biennial policy conference, is confident that the transport workers will reject all forms of wage restraint, adhere to unilateral puclear disarmament and withdrawa from the EEC - and support Mr Neil Kinnock in his attempt to win the leadership of the Labour Parly.

The miners will do much the same. On neither agenda is there any suspicion of a rank and file political revolt in favour of the law reforms about to be introduced by Mr Norman Tebeit, Secretary of State for Employment. Ministers may feel that they have won the argument in the country, but the policy-making processes of the Labour movement are grinding inexorably towards a sort-out, which could come this winter. The path for that will be charted next week, in the formal debates and behind-thescenes discussions on strategy in the movement's two most politically

The Times Portrait: Andreas Papandreou

The Greek enigma keeping everyone guessing

For six months, starting today, the European Community will be led and officially represented on the world stage by a man who believes, or claims to believe, that his country ought not to be in the Community at

The contradiction will not worry him unduly. Andreas Papandreon is quite used to living with contradic-tions. He has, after all, succeeded in making himself the incarnation of Greek anti-American nationalism in spite of having lived for 22 years in the United States as an American citizen. Some Greeks claim that, even now, you can detect the occasional trace of an American accept in his Greek. His Chicagoborn wife, Margaret, remains an important influence on him. She is regarded as the centre of an important clique among his advisers, with at least partial control over who sees him and when.

Papandreou is also quite used to being the centre of controversy. Ever since he joined his father's government in 1964, he has been one of the most controversial figures in Greek Until 1960 he had been chairman of the economics department of the University of California in Berkeley. Colleagues remember him as a brilliant but not especially radical economist - certainly not a Marxist-- apparently bent on pursuing an academic career. But his father, the veteran populist politician George Papandreon, leader of the Centre Union, returned to power in 1963 after a long period of conservative rule. By then already in his seventies, George Papandreou felt the need of his son's support and advice, and probably also thought of grooming him for the succession.

"Professor Papandreou", as Andreas was to be known for some time in newspaper reports, was at the centre of a group of young economists, mostly American-trained like himself, who set about planning the new government's economic policy. But it soon became apparent that his interests were not confined to economics. One of his colleagues was astonished to be asked to persuade the prime minister not to appoint his son as minister of coordination, the central economic policy post. Seeing his surprise, Andreas remarked: "Even you have not understood me. What I want is to be minister of public order, and ride to my office on Arrested on the day of the coup in 1976, Andreas was charged with high treason and held for eight months in solitary confindement, then amnestied and allowed to go into exile. He later said that the seven-year struggle against the Colonels' dictatorship "led to a much clearer understanding always latent in me - of the structure of power in Greece". Greece, he the dictatorship was "a very special form of control over Greece' exercised by the Americans. Nato itself was part of the mechanism for this, and "popular sovereignty, domocratic procedures, social reform were in this context imposs-ible". His father's populism would not work. Only a full-blooded socialist programme and a complete disengagement from Nato could save Greece. Accordingly, on his return to Greece in 1974, he founded the Panhellenic Socialist Movement (Pasok). Seven years later the party swept to power.

People voted for Papandreou more out of dissatisfaction with the corruption and mismanagement of the New Democracy government, than out of enthusiasm for his radicalism in foreign policy, although the latter did him no harm with much of the Greek electorate. Many Greeks do share his view that Turkey is a more serious threat to Greek security than the Soviet Union, and that Nato is responsible for the continued partition of Even before the election, Papandreon had began to hint that his line on both Nato and the EEC would be more pragmatic than party rhetoric suggested. Although he has not been able to get Nato to guarantee Greece's frontiers explicitly against Turkish aggression, it is clear that inside Nato, Greece has an implicit American guarantee, as well as American military assistance, which it would not have outside. Similarly Papandreou, although he likes to use the EEC as an excuse for his inability to introduce socialism in Greece, has not made any serious attempt to take Greece out. Instead Greece submitted a memorandum asking for a special status within the Community, to which it has not yet had a clear

Ironically France, under a fellow-socialist government and generally very pro-Greek, is being as uncooperative as anyone in as attitude to Greek demands. President Mitter-rand makes little effort to conceal rand makes little effolt to conceal his impatience with Papandreon's posturings. He was profoundly initiated by the Greek prime minister's clumsy attempt to stage a meeting between him and Yassir Arafat in Athens last September, and at the pre-Williamsburg meeting of furnment socialist leaders be could European socialist leader he could be seen staring fixedly ahead of him while Papandreou spoke animatedly into his ear. The most difficult foreign policy issue for Papandreou to respive has proved to be the American bases in Greece, which he had pledged to get rid of. The Americans have refused to fix a date for their departure and negotiations on the terms of their remaining have dragged on and on. Last month Papandreon told everyone that a decision would be taken within a week, and the text of the agreement was leaked in a progovernment newspaper. There an unexplained, last-minute hitch arose and the negotiations were again prorogued.

No one but Papandreou himself seems to know exactly what the problem is, or whether there really is one. Some think he is unable to make up his mind, others that he finds it useful to keep the issue in suspense. The Greek economy is going through a very bad patch, and government, including the powerful communist party which has come out very strongly against the anti-strike law passed at the beginning of June. Some saw this law as part of the preparations for an expected wave of protest strikes against an agreement on the bases. But others place it more in an economic context, pointing out that the government cannot afford to increase wages in the public sector and therefore must prepare to resist strikes for wage demands.

If the latter interpretation is right, Papandreou may have decided not to take on the left over the issue of the bases at the same time. Neither, however, is he willing to risk an allout confrontation with the United States by breaking off the talks.

Many people in Athens, not only in right-wing circles, detect a totalitarian streak in Pasok's behaviour and speak of the dangers of a one-party state. Papandreou himself remains an enigma: adored by his followers, intensely feared by his opponents, resented for his highhanded and personal style of government by some of his colleagues, yet regarded as pragmatic and even charming by some Western diplomats. Once, after a visit to London before he came to power, he proclaimed a strong sense of affinity with Tony Benn. Perhaps, if Tony Benn ever became prime minister, that is what he would be like.

general feeling we picked up during SDP have been reflecting optimistically on the future shape of the Alliance. But, further down both parties, the confident slogans of the election have given way to a less confident "Where do we go from here?" There are some intriguing rustling noises in the grassroots. The Alliance's future will be settled as much by that patchwork of local shifts, splits and deals as by the pronouncements from on high.

Tonight, for example, one such shift may take place, in the unlikely setting of fashionable Chelsea, where SDP members will float the idea of breaking away from the party's own area structure and setting up an individual, constituency association, which some influential local supporters hope would soon be ransformed into an overall Alliance

Chelsea's Liberals wil meanwhile put forward a draft plan for a joint body, made up by representatives of both parties, which would run all future Alliance election campaigns in the constituency. Just bow far the discussion among the half-dozen participants will progress is uncertain, but the intent is clear.

"I think an Alliance continuency association in Chelsea is probable within the year, I certainly hope so," says Mrs. Shirley Hewson of Kensington and Chelsea SDP. "The he election was that people cannot be bothered with the nuances between the SDP and Liberals. They were just interested in the Alliance." Mr Tony Somers, chairman of Cheisea Liberals told be: "We would like to go ahead on such lines. I think a lot of our grassroot supporters already think of themselves as the Alliance and have largely forgotten separate identities. They find it difficult to understand or accept the idea of two separate parties, yet working together Although the demand for such fundamental change by the grassroots is patchy, it appears to be gathering momentum. While the higher echelons of the SDP seem largely unaware of the feelings building up in the constituencies, senior Liberals are much more alert to the changing views of activists.

They have already received soundings from two regional confer-ences and are now collecting replies to questionnaires sent out to all parliamentary candidates aout the election. "We are preparing to take steps to ease potential constitutional and practical problems that might exist for next year's Euro-election," one official commented.

The grassroots pressure for terminating the existing cumbersome dual party structure is not confined to inner London but can be country. In Lincoln, sharp differences between the two parties over the choice of the SDP candidate to fight the general election have been replaced by a strong desire on both sides for a merger at national level.

"There will be a strong push from here, certainly from the Liberals, to encourage our party to think seriously about such a move," says the Rev David Parker, local Liberal

In Ross, Cromarty and Skye, won by the SDP on June 9, an Alliance group, rather than Liberals or SDP, "very clearly running the show, according to one national Liberal

"We hope to establish some kind of Alliance structure within the constituency", says Mr David MacDonald, the local Liberal constituency secretary, whose wife was election agent. We are thinking in terms of an Alliance club in which both SDP and Liberals could have associate membership.
"In effect it would be very, very close to a merger. There is a feeling that perhaps the merger might come about from the grassroots. But the difficulty is that each party has its own constitution, which makes a merger at grassroots level difficult." Inevitably, far from all local parties share such an unbridled belief in the virtues of a political seen, in different forms, all over the coalition, but activists of both parties are increasingly vocal on the practical need for change, particularly in the selection of candidates, if the partnership is to continue in a viable form.

Although the acrimony over the original allocation of seats evaporated during the four weeks of joint campaigning in the election, there is near unanimity that if the controversial share-out remains basically unaltered for the next election, Liberals must have an equal say in the selection of Social Democrat candidates, and vice versa.

With the bonhomie created in hundreds of election committee rooms up and down the country between the two parties continued in joint jumble sales and fund-raising events, the pressure for change is unlikely to decrease.

"I think there will be a merger at the bottom," says Mr Jeff Roberts, who contested Hackney, South for the Liberals, even though an SDP MP was also standing. "The leadership won't be able to do anything about it. A merger on those lines will be unstoppable because goodwill is there. But I think Dr Owen will do everything he can to stop it, because it will disadvantage him and his parliamentary col-

Mrs Thatcher's box of gimmicks

There is something peculiarly forbidding about a collection of people gathered together for no reason except membership of the same profession. Congresses of democracy. The Declaration of funeral directors, quantity surveyors, clergymen and proctologists abound these days and are no doubt useful, as well as congenial, jam-borces. But one cannot help imagining the conversation at breakfast in the Congress Facility of the Excelsior Motel somewhere off the M Umpteen, and shuddering.

I fear that my first reaction to the gathering in London last Friday of Mrs Thatcher and a number of other conservative leaders from around the world was of this kind ("Marmalade please, Helmut, And, my dear, you should see my money supply figures".) But it seems that this flippancy is out of place. This was no idle get-together for the exchange of professional chit-chat, but the launching of a new international movement, a crusade, "a great dominion of mind and spirit" (to quote Mrs Thatcher) and was graced by the presence not only of the Prime Minister, but of the German Chancellor and the Vice-President of the United States, all spouting high-flown platitudes at a most impressive rate. The International Democratic Union, thus inaugurated, is a curious body with a curious history. It is the offspring of the European Democrat Union, set up on a British initiative in 1978 with the idea of bringing about a common conservative front in the European Parliament. This didn't really work. The German Christian Democrats and the Danish DKF became members of the EDU along with a number of centre-right parties from non-EEC countries such as Austria, Finland. Norway, Portugal and Sweden. But the German CDU refused to sit in the Parliament with the Conserva-tives, and Belgian, Dutch and Italian Christian Democrats refused to join at all on the valid ground that their specifically Catholic element and moderate, pro-trade union economic views made them unsuitable bed-fellows for the likes of Thatcherite

What has happened instead is that a much looser, vaguely consultative grouping, defined essentially as "anti-socialist" and based in Vienna has developed and attracted interest from non-European parties such as the Australian Liberal Party, the New Zealand National Party and the American Republicans. More recently, the Japanese Liberal Democrats and the American Democrats, started to circle round. In order to accommodate these odd interlopers without disrupting the European organization, a parallel Pacific Democrat Union was started in 1981 and the crowning umbrella organization, the IDU, opens its doors this month. It will be run from Conservative Central Office and its secretary is the executive secretary of the Conservative Party's Inter-national Office.

What on earth will it do? Well, according to Mrs Thatcher's speech as opposed to governments, offers "a real and new opportunity in the future for creative statecraft", which apparently means a chance to spread the ideas of democracy across the world. How? By propaganda; by combining in the United Nations; and by bringing economic prosperity to the developing countries.

It is not immediately apparent about spreading the ideas of democracy. The "Declaration of Principles" which the conservative luminaries signed on Friday has had to be conched in such banal terms in order to accommodate all the parties involved that it could be subscribed to in simost every particular by most members of the Labour Party. The signatories note, for instance, "common conviction" that democratic societies provide individuals throughout the world with the best traditions of political liberty

This is pretty tame stuff and the only interesting question is why Mrs Thatcher is pressing it so eathusi-astically. After all, it is not without its dangers, both practical and strategic. The American Republi-cans are already, it seems, talking about support for "democratic" parties in Central America - a matter which seems likely to raise what might politely be called "definitional problems".

More fundamentally, it seems to me that the liberal-conservative package that Mrs Thatcher bought from Hayek, Friedman and Sir Keith Joseph cannot stand a lot of recretical unwrapping at this time. Its main shortcoming - that is, its lack of an adequate moral justification - has been cruelly exposed by the crisis. The man in the street, while he will (to judge by the British election results) put up with unemployment for the time being as an unpleasant act of God, shows no signs of doing what theory would require and accept the injustice of it as the necessary price of freedom.

There is a fundamental tension between Mrs Thatcher's call for patriotism and a sense of community based on the family on the one hand, and the selfish and acquisitive attitudes encouraged by a free market on the other. The mere addition of the words "socially orientated" to the words "market economy" is not enough to bring the two ideas into harmony. The fact of the matter is that the only form of conservatism that is currently good shape, because it is the only one to have stood up to the severe practical test of the last five years, is provided by Japanese society - a conservative form of corporatism. The trouble for Mrs Thatcher is that Japanese corpora-tism, like all other forms of corporatism, is supposed to be at the opposite theoretical pole from Mrs Thatcher and ought to be anathematized by her, instead of being admitted to her International Democratic Union as happened last

Here, presumably, is the justifi-cation for the IDU. Like the Socialist International, it packages a number of very different parties in the same box. It thereby creates an (almost wholly spurious) impression of unity and momentum and presents the Prime Minister as one of the leaders, if not the leader, of a great international movement. It also has the beauty of flexibility. If the Christian Democrats clear success in the Italian elections this week, it would have been further conclusive evidence of the centre-right tide sweeping through the democracies. The disaster that actually occurred is naturally due to the very different circumstances of Italy. In other words it is a useful gimmick. Meanwhile, the real crisis of conservatism goes on around us.

Wanted: a print-out with a happy ending

Some of my best friends are could devise a simpler way of paying authors their royalties. Philip Hope-Wallace said that publishers should never commission journalists to write books, because disappoinment lay in store for both parties. Either the hack took the advance royalties, and was so mesmerized by the distance ahead of the deadline that he never delivered. Or he did deliver, and was disgruntled not to be paid, having forgotten about the advance and spent it years before.

The new royalty forms are so complicated with VAT numbers and obscure percentages about export make neither head nor tail of them. All you can say for certain is that royalties always arrive late and smaller than expected. All you can do is have a publisher you can trust not to cheat you (like mine, dear boys and girls at Garden House, like mine, I hasten to type); or have an agent to check the forms for you. And who needs a literary groupic to take at least 10 per cent of his modest carnings?

It has become a platitude to grumble about the obscurity of the PLR registration forms. It is their competence that worries me now. I have now recived back a computer print-out of titles that have been registered PLR. At the bottom the sage machine has typed the not exactly inspiriting message: "Please note that there may be minor inaccuracies or omissions in the title / contributor / Publisher and/or year column. Any such errors should be ignored".

Well, that is all very well, dear old computer. I do not greatly grumble if a minor inaccuracy has misread my A Word in Your Ear for Barbara Cartland's A Virgin in Mayfair, because I might win on the exchange. But suppose that a minor inaccuracy has mistaken my book for A Ward in Yorkshire, privately printed at a vanity publisher, print-run of 75? I shall feel robbed.

Confidence is not restored by the Richard Evans sign yet another form and asserting well number on the computer print-out is 004676. I don't mind if they have confused my number with M. M. Kaye's or John Le Carré's. But suppose that the computer has muddled my number with that of a part-author of a worthy but imposs-ibly obscure work of sociology from Keele University Press. Author's neurosis about money, always atent, flares up over PLR.

It is not assuaged by a vast and impertinent form from an American publisher, asking such jaw-sagging current topics peripheral to that of your book which you would be able address during an interview?" The question that seemed improper was the one asking for friends who are critics or literary editors for American papers, to whom the book might be sent, provided there is a reasonable chance that they will mention it in their publications. That is called log-rolling in the trade, and should be avoided by reputable

The only hope, I think, is to write a romantic novel that will win the Trask Prize. You remember: Betty Trask, the great and good writer of ghastly love stories, left enough money to give a sum not unadjacent to £40,000 a year for romantic fiction. Even now Angela Carter and Martin Amis are rewriting the endings of their next books. The Trask Prize may change the direction of the British Novel.

The difficuly is, what is a romantic novel? Those in the trade define it as one with a happy ending. The prudent man certainly refuses to judge it, or indeed any, literary prize. But he can at least give writing it 2 whirl. Some work of soppy note may yet be done. Excuse me: "I worship you", he said against her lips. The trouble is that you have to

THE DEATH RITUAL

Murder is not an isolated event. The sensations aroused by any crime, and most of all by murder the hunt for the criminal, the public's absorption in the trial, all show that this most evil of crimes lights a flame of response in all members of society. The wickedness of others kindles some evil in the hearts of us all. drawing us with it. When crimes mount up, this flame of evil glowers in the moral indignation which mounts with them, and the one evil becomes matched by the other. Action calls up reaction. The reaction to the crime of murder all too often calls up a demand to exterminate the source of evil by a public act of expiation, as though the majesty of the law, the solemnity and finality of a death sentence could somehow dispose of the cannot do. Parliament is again about to debate the principle of the death penalty for murder. The positions of principle on either side are clear enough. You can believe that no society should ever adopt the practice of judicial killing as one of its measures of punishment. You can equally believe that judicial killing is the very hallmark of civilization, giving the state, in its cool bureaucratic way, the duty to reaffirm society's cohesion when its unity has been be violated so absolutely by the taking of life within it.

evil once and for all. That it

The flux of debate is well within these principles. There are three distinct strands to the question. They concern first the death penalty's deterrent power to reduce the incidence of murder; secondly, the real nature of judicial killing as a punishment; thirdly, society's need to feel satisfied that the authority of the state is able to protect it from murderers.

We have already argued that the death penalty is unlikely to work as a deterrent for most terrorist murders, certainly among would-be martyrs of the IRA. That probably applies also to the zealots of other terrorist organizations whose passion for a cause shows little respect both for the lives of innocent people who get in their way, and for their own lives in the pursuit of that cause. The discussion of the deter-marginal role, however, If the evidence could be adduced to show that it really worked as a deterrent for murder, and that its abolition had led to a great increase in the kind of murder which would previously have been inhibited by the deterrent shadow of the gallows, that would materially affect the grounds for deciding whether or not to reintroduce capital punishment for certain types of murder.

The evidence remains inconclusive. It cannot be argued that the death penalty - though it must to some extent be a deterrent to some would-be murderers - would so noticeably affect the statistics of murder that its reintroduction would provide a sufficient and susiained reduction in the incidence of murder.

What then of the punishment? It does not matter to the argument whether it is the rope, the rifle or the needle. It is condign all right. It is absolute. But it is soon over. It is limited to the period between conviction and execution. The public's desire for retribution thereafter falls fully and cruelly not on the convict but on his family. It is arguably thus a lighter punishment for the criminal and a heavier one for his family than any long prison sentence would

Yet the strength of the desire for retribution must be recognised though it is obviously not uniform throughout society. Our system of justice must contain a strong retributive element. It is not just the pressure for restoration of the death penalty which suggests that the retributive side of justice has become dangerously neglected in favour of the pressure for penal reform and the rehabilitation of offenders. There is a feeling that the political culture pays more attention to what is happening to prisoners than to their victims. Has the prison regime, at least in spirit, got out of line with society's need to feel that sufficient attention is paid to the necessity for retribution?

Overcrowding in prisons is now so acute that it would be hard to argue that prison life is not penal enough for most should not be relegated to a tages prey less on the convicted murderers, both because the length of their sentences may soon inure them to discomfort, and because many murderers come to mould their prison lifestyles and their fellow prisoners to their particular needs.

We have to recognise therefore that the pressure for restoration springs not just from society's desire for an unqualified and absolute revenge. It springs from a profound and expanding suspicion that there is too little relative retribution left in the punishments meted out to

ing here, since the punishment for murder varies considerably according to administrative decisions and judges' recommendations. It cannot be argued that all murderers must be considered beyond redemption. Some are worthy of rehabilitation. Society must not reject the idea that some cases of murder can eventually become technically "forgivable". To argue otherwise would be to argue that all cases of murder merit a life sentence which means a life sentence, as applied, for instance, to Rudolph Hess; and who still thinks that that old man still deserves his fate?

The punishment for murder must be a long sentence and must be seen to be a long sentence, served in conditions of austerity, to say the least. Perhaps we cannot nowadays contemplate a Devil's Island for murderers but we should also be saved from the suspicion that murderers – however heinous their crime – are likely to be allowed out of prison in the end. There are some murderers now in our prisons of whom it should be said that they will never, never, never be free.

Armed crime is an adjunct to murder which should inhabit the same climate of stringent retribution and austerity of sentence. Only then may society's instincts be sufficiently palliated to check the demand for restoration of judicial killing. Such an act would not, of course, reduce the criminality of that which had provoked society to this response. However, at the heart of the death penalty and all its not penal enough for most judicial panoply there would still prisoners. Deprivation of liberty lie an act of ritual violence far is palpable to anybody who has out of proportion to the threat

THE PYM FACTOR

Thatcher need to take of Mr as others have asked before him Francis Pym? He demonstrated what an accomplished parliamentarian he is when he addressed the House of Commons on Wednesday for the first time since his dismissal as Foreign Secretary. He may not have been effective as a departmental minister, but as a House of Commons man he has few superiors. His speech was digmified, arousing sympathy but not overtly courting it. He expressed his loyalty but not to the point where it could be taken for granted. He issued a warning. but not in such openly mutinous terms as to be classed as a rebellion. He poses potentially a more formidable threat to Mrs Thatcher than such dissidents as Mr Heath or Sir Ian Gilmour have ever done, Mr Heath has always been too obvious in his resentment: nobody was ever likely to believe that he was acting more in sorrow than in anger. Sir Ian has always seemed more suited to an elegant and principled protest than to mounting an effective rebellion. Mr Pym is nore prudent than Mr Heath and tougher than Sir lan. But the threat that he poses is mly potential. He gave Mrs Thatcher full and deserved credit or the election victory, and he nade it clear that he was not alling for any change in the broad. He did not suggest that neither respect has she shown here was any magic cure for much evidence of preparation

How much notice will Mrs unemployment, but he asked -- for greater sensitivity towards the unemployed: He did not demand any alteration in the objectives of British foreign policy, but he proposed that the Government should start talking directly with the Soviet Union as a means of achieving these goals. This would be a change of method rather than of substance. but an important change nonetheless. Above all, he was warning Mrs Thatcher not to interpret her election triumph as a licence to be harsh or extreme.

> Mr Biffen may have given an impression of reinforcintg that warning when he wound up the debate. It is not an accident when a senior minister uses such Conservative code phrases as "a sense of continuity that is the hallmark of British public life". This followed a more explicit statement by Mr Biffen last week that the new Tory majortity will not mark an increase in the ideological tempo.

But it is far more likely that Mr Biffen was sending a message not to Mrs Thatcher but to the Conservative Party and to the country. He was in all probability not telling her that she should be careful, but telling us that she would be. That would accord both with the style of her election campaign and with her substance of policy at home or reshuffling of the Cabinet. In for a sweeping programme of radical reforms. It is only if Mrs Thatcher runs into trouble that Mr Pym's potential threat is likely to become an actual one. The magnitude of her election victory should not be obscured by statistical comparisons between the proportion of the total vote won now and in 1979; there were a number of Conservative supporters who felt it safe this time to indulge in the luxury of a vote for the Alliance. Her personal authority dominated the campaign and will remain preeminent in government.

Mr Pym is not offering an alternative policy, merely an alternative attitude. That will not be enough to weaken Mrs Thatcher's control unless things go seriously wrong for the Government. Politics is an unforgiving occupation, how-ever, and if in one and a half to two years' time the economic revival has petered out, unemployment is still rising, the unions are less docile and public hope is fading, then the Prime Minister will know that behind her on the Conservative backbenches there is a critic with the parliamentary skills to mount a rebellion and no sense of personal obligation to dissuade him from doing so. But that is a risk that she took deliberately when she sacked him. It is a risk that could make the consequence of policy failures more serious. but will not diminish the effects of success.

Military degree

From Colonel J. F. Williams-Wynne Sir, Your correspondent, Mr Michael Davis (June 25) suggests that a knowledge of Russian, and possibly even Chinese, should be included in a military degree course.

Surely Brig-Gen Costello, VC, was nearer the mark when he taught us at military studies at Cambridge in the twenties to learn all that we could about the behaviour, not the languages, of foreigners, so that in the event of war we might know what to expect.

It is nearly 60 years ago now, but I seem to recall that he regarded it as equally important to find out all we could about possible allies as well as likely foes!

Independent way with prosecutions From the President of the Prosecuting Solicitors' Society of England and Wales Sir, This society cannot but be gratified at the Government's commitment, announced in the Queen's Speech, at least to the preparation of proposals for the establishment of an independent prosecution service. There is, however, no commitment to legislation within the next five years or ever and, if the Government intends to introduce legislation, surely the information to enable it to do so is already available.

It is intended, when the present Home Office working party reports, to publish a working paper, thereby ensuring that no positive proposals will be made until ample time has elapsed for that working paper to be fully discussed and considered.

The working party has already produced, in December, 1982, a discussion paper and substantial discussion, written observations and meetings have taken place since

Before the working party was set up the Home Office issued a consultative memorandum on the report of the Royal Commission on Criminal Procedure and they were supplied with further facts, views and opinions at that time. The royal commission itself took over two years and received written and oral evidence from every body of persons with an interest, however remote, in

We have had a royal terministen and a committee appropria commission and a committee appointed and we have had every possible investigation that could be suggested in order to enable us to come to a conclusion.

Little seems to have changed. The present state of uncertainty is already hampering recruitment in existing prosecuting solicitors' offices and no doubt operating as a further reason for postponing the setting up of departments in those counties where no office exists.

May we be given, at an early date please, at least a provisional timetable for the promulgation, enactment and bringing into effect of legislation? Yours faithfully,

Ghana's legal system

From the Acting High Commissioner for Ghana Sir, The AFP report which you aptioned "Ghana sets up new law for the people" (June 27) creates the erroneous impression that the Provisional National Defence Council (PNDC) has "proclaimed" new laws and replaced the nation's traditional legal system.

The Ghana High Commission deeply regrets the fact that the pleas of a meeting of workers in the Accra-Tema metropolitan area should be given the aura of a governmental pronouncement. Even though one would concede that the call of workers stems from the popular awareness of certain shortcomings of the nation's legal structure, the PNDC is fully aware that any precipitate action taken without a proper analysis may not necessarily achieve the required results, namely a more effective and dynamic indiciary.

It must be emphasised that the National Defence Committee which co-ordinates the activities of the various community or workers' defence committees is to issue a statement on the resolution soon

Meanwhile, the Attorney-General has categorically denied that the office of the Chief Justice has been abolished. In addition he has refuted the claim that the Judicial Council has been dissolved. Yours faithfully,

J. K. DAVIES, Office of the High Commissioner for Ghana, 13 Belgrave Square, SW1. June 28.

Taxing allowances From Mr Charles King-Farlow

Sir, Mr John Herbert's letter (June 22) about taxing teachers' allow-ances for travelling to attend school functions outside normal working hours is disturbing. A few years ago, sitting as a general commissioner in Birmingham, I heard what was presented as a test case over such allowances. Miss Williamson's appeal against assessments to income tax on her allowances was allowed by the general commissioners but the Revenue appealed to the High Court

Mr Justice Walton gave judgment on October 30, 1981 and took the opportunity to suggest that the matter ought not to have been brought before him, with references to nuts, sledgehammers and persecuting minnows. Mr Herbert should ask his Inspector of Taxes for a copy of the judgment in Donnelly v Williamson.

As the judgment records, the case was presented as a test case. The Revenue should not therefore be continuing to treat these allowances as taxable emoluments. If the Revenue are appealing to the Court Appeal a "protective" assessment might be justified, but the taxpayer should be told if he is being ass not in accordance with the law but as the Revenue would like it to be. Yours faithfully, CHARLES KING-FARLOW. Vicarage Road, Edgbaston, Birmingham

Taking care of the terminally ill

From the Duchess of Norfolk Sir, In your report of June 17 on private health you remark that the burden of looking after Britain's medically neglected", in which you include the terminally ill, has been tackled successfully by neither the National Health Service nor the private sector.

Independent hospices, specialising in terminal care, do in fact tackle the problem with widely recognized success, acknowledged by ministers and demonstrated by the remarkable level of public support for setting up more. At present there are 34, providing twice as many beds as the equivalent NHS units, mostly within general hospitals. At least 12 are nearing completion.

I have yet to meet any visitor to an independent hospice who has not been deeply impressed by its quality of care. Their particular skills in dealing with pain and bringing peace of mind to patients and their relatives in a tranquil and "family" environment are seen by the public as quite distinct from terminal care in a busy general hospital concentrating on cure.

As cooperation between health services increases under gevernment policy, care for the terminally ill in their homes, the form of care most economical and often most satisfactory for the patient, will, one hopes, expand. Home care must be backed by in-patient resources. Independent hospices, in spite of some haphazard

Degrees of security

From Professor G. C. McVittie Sir, The security methods at Government Communications Government Headquarters (GCHQ) have recently been much commented on in the public press. The following incident may throw further light on these methods.

Some eighteen months ago the Government released to the Public Record Office the World War II daily weather charts covering enemy-held Europe. The data plotted on the charts were obtained by reading enemy meteorological phers at Bletchley Park, work of which I was in charge throughout the war. There was also released a file containing many of the reports I had written to the deputy director of the Meteorological Office about the cypher-breaking process.

Need for consultation From Mr G. F. Hancock

Sir, I was alarmed to read from Sir Peter Parker's letter (June 20) that British Rail is in the business of consultancy. Does he not risk giving us consultants a bad name?

On the commuter line on which I travel trains are either late, staff-less or not there at all. The rolling stock is grimy, outdated, uncomfortable and overdue for retirement. At the first touch of frost our points freeze up; and the arrival of summer is marked by a fire at Clapham Junction.

How often have we commuters waited on freezing platforms for non-existent trains, to be faced in the evenings with Sir Peter and Mr Ray Buckton safely delivered by chauffeur-driven cars and arguing it out in warm studios. A trouble-free return journey in the evening is a subject for family commentary.

Under such circumstances, foreign railway accepting consultancy services from British Rail would need to have its ball bearings examined.

From Mr Lawrence James Sir, Lucky the child who spends 7,300 hours watching television (Mr John Pearman, June 27). Whatever his other failings he will not, I hope, fill out his "active and passive vocabularies" with such ugly and obscure jargon as "subtext", "print media", and "word-based conceptual skills". If such words and phrases are the common currency of the child's teachers then it is understandable that he should be driven to the television screen. Seated before it, he may over the long hours come to appreciate, among other things, the need for simplicity, clarity and logic in argument.

As a result he might not, for instance, state baldly that the ambience of two television programmes is "Conservative", offer no supportive evidence, and then pass on in a classic non-security to another marginally related matter. Your faithfully,

Threat to vital overseas aid

From the Chairman of Oxfam Sir, Your recent leader on the scientific units which are part of the official aid programme ("Scrutiny of , the scrutineers". June 20) appears to have fallen on deaf ears. The Foreign Secretary is shortly to confirm to Parliament the cutbacks in this, perhaps the most effective part of Britain's overseas aid. We in Oxfam are particularly concerned. We deal every day with people whose lives, crops, or livestock are blighted by bilibarzia, tse-tse flies, termites, rats, or brown plant-hoppers (a major rice pest). The projects we finance involve a whole spectrum of subjects covered by the scientific units - malaria control, refugee camps, cotton, charcoal, milling, pepper, pesticides and medicinal herbs.

We therefore know at first hand the value to people in the Third World of the work of the Centre for Overseas Pest Research and the Tropical Products Institute (as they were called before their recent merger). The work of these units had already done much to reduce disease, poverty and hunger, and there is much more work in the pipeline. The COPR and the TPI may have had their roots in empire, but by a quirk of development they turn out to be one of the leading edges of today's aid programme. The "bank" of expertise, contacts and credibility they have built up over the years gives then the capability of bringing significant improvements to many millions of poor people during the rest of the century. The cost to Britain is minimal -£6.7m in 1982-83, much of it spent in Britain or on British people abroad so that the foreign exchange cost is even lower. That is less than 1 per cent of the aid programme: not much for units whose work is totally appropriate to Britain's real aid programme of more help to the

It is surely not too late for the Government to think again. Let us hone that the new Foreign Secretary will heed the needs of the many millions of poor people whose suffering will be prolonged if the cuts go ahead.

Logical positivism?

From Mr Toby Mason

Sir, I imagine few people realise: quite what an excellent all-round test of ability GCE A levels are. On Monday, June 20, I sat a "Literature and civilization" paper as part of my Latin exam: the candidates were one of the best tests of logic and clear-headedness I have ever come across: "Answer five... questions in all. Answer at least two from section A and at least one from section B." "Fair enough", thought I, resisting the impulse to draw a quick Venn diagram to make sure I had it straight, and turned to section A. "Answer at least two questions from this section and not more than four. Choose questions on at least two topics. Answer at least one oddnumbered question and at least one even-numbered question. Do not answer more than two questions on any topic". Section C had the added attraction of asterisks, for those who had complacently thought they might have understood section A.

As I sat there scratching my cranium and trying to devise a Venn diagram ingenious enough to in-clude all the necessary elements, I marvelled at the wisdom of the examiners, who had managed to include a searching test of logical thought in a paper ostensibly about. the Aeneid as the epic of Rome. Dance Second Stride The Place

Three works newly made for this summer's tour constitute the programme being given by Second Stride at The Place this week. They provide, according to individual reaction, either a valuable contrast in styles or an example of disparate and contradictory approaches.

Richard Alston's half of the programme already contains within itself an engaging juxta-position. In The Brilliant and the Dark he offers dances that bring out the contrasts of mood within the music of Britten's Cello Sonata, Op 65. For Java. he takes a lighter-weight inspiration, old recordings by the Inkspots, and provides a humorous dance commentary interestingly, the dance style of Java, for all its use of jazzy period hand movements, is basically more classical than that of the Britten ballet. The jokes in Java frequently come from interrupting a coolly poised solo with gestures that interpret literally the words of such songs as "Whispering Grass" or "We Three".

Both ballets reveal the excellent qualities of a strong team of dancers, harmonious in ensemble although all markedly individual in character and manner. Among them, let me invidiously mention the self-contained quality of Maedée Dupres, the sharp poise of Sally Owen, the wary alertness of Philippe Giraudeau and the glowing elegance of Juliet Fisher.

Ian Spink's New Tactics also features several of those among its performers, but he seems to trying to follow quite a different route, with an elaborate though enigmatic decor (beach scene? bedroom? interior landscape?) as a setting for fragmented dialogue, repeated natural actions and a little dancing.

Spink has made the piece in collaboration with Tim Albery, a director from the straight theatre, Orlando Gough as composer of a nervously rhythmic score (piano, cello, woodwind, singer) and two designers, Craig Givens and Antony McDonald. Intermittently amusing when the portentous, unconnected soliloquies abut with the daft relevance of a game of Consequences, piece seems to me to miss its apparent aim of illuminating character and emotion, although Juliet Fisher and Siobhan Davies both act with a shrewd commitment that almost overcomes the feeble material. No doubt others will see it as a breakthrough to a new kind of drama. Whether it really has anything for the same audience as Alston is quite another matter.

After the long tour they have just made to New York and the Far East, the Royal Ballet will spend next season entirely in Britain, including visits to Manchester and Bristol.

They will use the opportunity to refresh the repertory with many new productions. Richard Alston will create a work for them, to be premiered in December with the creation by David Bintley already forecast on this page. A one-act ballet by Kenneth MacMillan will have its first performance in February, and in April Derek Deane's first large-scale work for the company will be given with the Royal Ballet premiere of Jiri Kylian's Return to the Strange Land.

Two innovations Members of the company will take part in four experimental workshops in association with BBC television and during July 1984 an evening of new works by young choreographers will be given.

Guest dancers appearing during the year will include Natalia Makarova, who actually returns to Covent Garden at the opening of the Royal Opera's season, dancing with Anthony Dowell in Ashton's choreo graphy for The Nightingale, Antionette Sibley and Rudolf Nureyev at Covent Garden, and the Canadian Evelyn Hart at Sadier's Wells. Negotiations are proceeding for other guest annearances.

The title of King of Comedy, together with the presence of Jerry Lewis, might raise misleading expectations: it is in fact a story of obsession and perverted, crazed ambition that matches with Taxi Driver and Raging Bull as an American triptych. Comedy just happens to be the stocking to the latest and the latest in-trade and motive of the latest hero created in collaboration by Martin Scorsese as director and Robert De Niro as actor. Like Travis Bickle, the Taxi Driver, Rupert Pupkin leads a hermit life in his cellar room, preparing himself to fulfil a driving fantasy that supplants all reality in his life - the ambition to be a standan comedian on television. The most important part of the fantasy is to be the friend of a real-life star, Jerry Langford (Jerry Lewis), and to do a spot on Langford's show. Thus it is that Rupert becomes one of the trail of lunatic fans who dog the star's feotsteps, and forms an alliance with Masha (Sandra Bernhard), a groupie possessed by a dangerously paranoid desire to possess Jerry.

Rupert's various ruses to force himself into Jerry's presence fail; Jerry's office returns his audition tapes unheard; Rupert and a girlfriend whom he has optimistically taken for a weekend visit to Jerry's house are ignominiously thrown out. Finally Rupert and Masha kidnap Jerry; and, while Masha is left in happy possession of her prize, Rupert demands as ransom the chance to appear as stand-in host on the Langford show. "Better king for a night than a schmuck all your life." There is an ironic final comment on success in the media world. We are left to suppose that a criminal eccentric in the media world. We are left to suppose that a criminal eccentric on Rupert's scale will so endear himself to a gullible public that, after serving a reduced prison sentence, his fantasies will in fact be realized: he will be a television star.

The film is both fascinating and disturbing in its use of comedy as the primary material for what is essentially a story of horror and deformities of the mind and personality. Rupert, a characteristically studied performance by De Niro, with his loud suits and irrepressible cheeriness, is a monster whose eagerness to ingratiate and amuse inspires by turns pity and distaste. When he finally gets his chance, and we see his act, it is no longer possible to know whether he is finny or not, only that his comedy material is in essence a Cinema

sion of personal retardation. If Masha's psychological disturbance is more extreme in its manifestations, Jerry Lewis's performance as Langford, the entertainer whose private life is misanthropic seclusion, is hardly less unsettling. Scorsese has adapted his method to the contradictions of the theme. He has abandoned his usual elaborated camera style for the uncluttered simplicity of old comic movies and required an effort of will, as he has endearingly confessed in an interview. "On one side there was the devil saying: "People will think you've got lazy. If you don't move your camera you're not really doing your job as director.' On the other band there was a reassuring angel: 'Don't do it. You don't need camera movements. It's the composition of the image that matters.' The angel proved wise.

One From the Heart in its way also reflects the fulfilment and frustration of dreams and ambitions. The final credit on the film says, with sad pride, "Filmed entirely on the stages of Zoetrope Studios". The Godfather gave Francis Ford Coppola his kingdom for a day, and success enabled him to establish a 10-acre studio where he planned to recreate the continuity, the standards of craftsmanship and the repertory strength of the Hollywood studios of long ago. Twenty-seven million dollars or thereabouts were spent on One From the Heart and now Zoetrope Studios are in the hands of

The problem was evidently Cop-pola's inability to reconcile the method and economies of the 1930s with the ambitions of the 1980s. Nostagically he chose to film a slight, bitter-sweet fable of the kind that Paramount and RKO turned out week after week. One Fourth of July a couple tiff, part, have their separate amorous adventures and come together again, drawn by the unconquerable power of true love. Just as in the old days it is acted out in a world of pure artifice: Las Vegas is rebuilt in the studio, with dancefloor pavements, flashing neons and cyclorama desert skies.

The old romantic fable is subverted, however, by giving the leading characters the touch of unglamorous realism. Frederic For-rest is no Cary Grant, but a naturalborn truckdriver type, a hangdog man with pouchy eyes and a terrible belly. Teri Garr is winning, and would have played waitress bit parts at Paramount. Their dream partners

- Nastassia Kinski as a circus artiste and Raul Julia as a Latin singing waiter - are appropriate figures of their limited and tawdry fantasy of

Somewhat counter to this there is a strong influence of Jacques Demy's musicals; and, like Demy in one of his less successful pictures, Coppola called in Gene Kelly to help out with the choreography. The whole film has a choreographic form, with dance sequences, and is backed by a commentary of songs performed by Crystal Gaile and Tom Waits.

These somewhat conflicting streams might have still been reconciled into something odd and appealing but for the veritable avalanche of technical effects that sweeps all before it. It is a massive demonstration film to show off all the facilities of Zoetrope, the marvels of Dolby Sound, the skills of cameramen, colour technicians, process people, animators, matte painters, graphic designers, special effects, visual effects and additional visual effects. It introduces new video wonders. Few films have ever had such a long list of camera credits. The human figures at the centre of the film are diminished to the scale of the little girl on the old television test

With Flashdance, directed by Adrian Lyne, Hollywood is firmly back in the old business of manufacturing dreams, and the huge commercial success the film has already enjoyed on its home ground shows how big the market in dreams remains. It is a slight fable about a girl who works as a welder in Pittsburg but, with a little help and love from her friends, fulfils her ambition of going to a ballet school. The film offers that happy Holly-wood view of working-class people who look and live like movie stars; undemanding if unconvincing psychology; a lot of really flash dancing and loud music; and an encouraging old-style denouement in the heroine's audition (the severe examiners, instead of telling her to go to the circus where she belongs, set to tapping their feet and nodding their heads in time with her big number). Jennifer Beals, who has a rather obvious stand-in for the more demanding dancing bits, is an attractive debutante. Variety, sharp as always, styled Flashdance femme Saturday Night Fever". The Australian director Bruce Beresford, making his first film in the United States, brings an outsider's more sceptical view to American dreams in Tender Mercies. Robert Duvall, an ever-improving actor, plays a man who has kicked the dreams and abandoned his career as a country-and-western star. Having given up booze as well as ambition, he finishes up at a tumbledown prairie hotel in Texas, where he falls in love with the gentle, churchgoing widowed proprietor.

It is a kindly, optimistic, tolerant film, prepared to see even the worst people as unfortunate rather than villainous, and uncynically to endow its hero and heroine with simple patience and good will. It is an extrmely small slice of life, but beautifully played by Duvail and a newcomer, Tess Harper. Beresford and his fellow-Australian Russell Boyd - who was also cinephotographer of Gallipoli and The Year of Living Dangerously - respond sensi-tively to the dust and splendour of the Texan scene.

An unfamiliar English title, Friends and Husbands, lured me to a second viewing, which I would certainly not otherwise have sought. of Margarethe von Trotta's Heller Wahn, originally reviewed from the Berlin Festival in February. The film is a considerable disappointment after The German Sisters. Under the strain of living up to her reputation, Ms von Trotta has mingled feminist tract and smart kitsch.

The story is set among artists, intellectuals and others ostensibly liberal in moral questions as well as politics. Hanna Schygulla plays an independent-spirited university lec-turer who befriends an introverted and suicidal young painter (Angela Winkler), and sets out to help her emancipate herself from her oppressive husband, with predictably disas-trous results. Schygulla and Winkler seem understandably hamstrung and embarrassed by their banal characters and the naive dialogue they are called upon to utter.

Taverner Covent Garden

If one caught no sight of the sun for 10 years, one might begin to wonder if it ever really shone. Some of us have been waiting that long for the Royal Opera to revive their production of Peter Maxwell Davies's Taverner, and there were bound to be doubts before Wednesday's opening night. Had the work's first success been due merely to scandal and novelty? Did the music perhaps not live up to the high challenge of the theme? Would the whole thing seem to have been surpassed by Davies's later works?

No, no, and no. Taverner triumphed on Wednesday as one of the most thrilling, provoking and indeed beautiful operas of recent times, a work of immense richness and vigour. To miss it now would be to miss something very important and very true. It would also be to miss a most stimulating evening in the theatre.

Taverner achieves so much because it dares so much. Its subject is man, and man at his keenest hour of doubt, his most horrendous moment of blind certainty. To combine this with a Tudor costume drama would seem to be like putting Kierkegaard on the set of Anne of the Thousand Days, but in fact the sixteenth-century appurtenances, scenic and musical, are bent in a peculiarly modern mind, and a peculiarly imaginative One.
The qualities of that imagin-

The orchestra actually sound as if they are playing music, and music that is not only splendid on its own account but works as theatre: the decadent harmonies supporting the Priest-Con-fessor's paid accusation, the impatient percussion of the second trial scene, the giddying ample feeling cataclysm of sound when the through a fine mind. Concert John Williams Festival Hall

The last day of the 1983 British tour of John Williams and Friends found them playing an insubstanitial agglomeration of bits and pieces. First, played on two guitars, came a Vivaldi Concerto for two mandolins (No 133 in the Bincherle catalogue), and this, with its busy, highly repetitive, yet wholly uninteresting patterns, made reasonable background

With such instruments as the vibraphone involved, this was probably not a wholly authentic performance. At least, though I am not an expert on the period, I doubt if Vivaldi knew the vibraphone. The audience tightly packing the Festival Hall applanded loyally after each movement just the same, and were rewarded with the finale of a Vivaldi Concerto for sopranino recorder (No 79 in the Bincherie catalogue). It was perky enough, and the expert soloist was Richard Harvey. The next piece was Stream, and there was no indication in the expensive programme as to who wrote it. Luckily, I had earlier acquired a copy of the leaflet advertising the concert, and this identified the composer as Brian Gascoigne, the ensemble's music director and the man who wrote the music for a film called The Seaweed Children.

the programme gathered that Stream alternates 10/8 and 5/8 with 9/8 and 3/4; and it uses the Lydian. Dorian and Phrygian modes. Despite this, it seemed to have caught the Vivaldi repetition habit and there were many vamps, ostina-tos, etc, plus occasional melo-dies which set the strings sawing rather than soaring.

There also were some Barrios solos - the usual sort of guitar recital fodder, yet exquisitely played by Mr Williams. And the second half was given over to something called "The Guitar is the Song". This was a collection of folksones from Ireland, Venezuela, Ethiopia and such places, arranged for the ensemble by Mr Gascoigne.

Perutz was underlining something which these days tends to get overlooked, namely that to be able to speak a language in a roughly serviceable way is no guarantee of being able to express one's feelings in it. Those exiles who, like his parents, were too old to acquire real subtlety in a new langage were dammed up for ever, "and it is that which makes you feel so strange and forlorn".

A lady who had worked as a nanny, model and washer-up (in addition to typing for Sigmund Frend) recalled her first crash course in English, listening to the speakers at Hyde Park Corner.

The action to the east formed the obliquely chilling reference point for

Stocks begin

New York (AP-Dow Jones) Stocks were firm after pulling back from their initial advance yesterday though trading was moderate.

The Dow Jones Industrial average was up about 5 points at 1,218. Its initial gain of more than 6 points had faded to less than 2 before the upturn.

Mr William Lesevre, vicepresident for investment strat-cgy at Purcell Graham & Co., said that despite the belief of many economists that interest rates were apt to go higher "Treasury Secretary Mr Donald Regan looks for rates to go down and Fed Chairman Mr Volcker, a couple of days ago. said he looks for lower rates. Mr Volcker can make it happen. So there is less fear of an interest Lefevre said that the market's ecent drop brought "no follow through decline on volume. That made it apparent to investors that stocks won't go down-that the bears looking for a correction again were unsuc-

He adds that stocks "should be strong this week as the midyear pension fund contributions are made and seek investment"

Search for compromise at Unctad

From Dessa Trevisan, Beigrade

Last minute haggling has delayed the end of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (Unctad) here: the final version, originally due for yesterday, is now set for today and the meeting is

The disagreement is over a esolution on aid, trade finance and commodities to avoid almost total failure after four weeks of debate which have failed to close the gap on all major issues between industrialized and developing countries. Ministers who arrived here for the closing are joining in efforts to bring the conference to a more or less successful compromise; they include Mr Paul Channon, the British Trade Minister, and Dr Otto Lambadorf, the West German conomics Minister. There has however been some progress on commodities and the conference is expected to urge ratification of the agreement to create a common fund in support of commodity prices which dates from the conference in 1976. Ratification by the US is crucial but it is not yet forthcoming whereas EEC countries are almost certain to

Mr Gordon Streeb, head of the American delegation, said that a good sign was that the conference was more inclined to put emphasis on specific problems than on ideological dis-

The developing countries have throughout been pressing for major changes and the conference exhausted itself in a confrontation which was never likely to beat fruit. The West was criticized for dragging its feet on trade liberalization as the developing group rejects the Western view that a rollback on protectionism should be conditional on an economic recovery among the industrialized countries.

There was, however, more progress on development aid with a pledge by the West to renew efforts to reach the United Nations aid target of 0.7 per cent of gross national product by 1985.

The Bank says it sees no reason to change its forecasts of only gradual growth of output in the coming months. Its economists are thought to be expecting an increase in output of around 2 per cent between now and next summer, somewhat less than the Trasury's prediction of 2.5 per cent

Economic growth of at least 2.5 per cent and probably more would be This gloomy picture, published needed to make any significant impact yesterday as Lord Richardson finally on unemployment in Britain. The Bank spreads its pessimism far and wide. It expects the recent rapid growth of consumer spending to taper off, since this has relied entirely on a sharp and unrepeatable drop in savings and near-record borrowing in the face of stagnant living standards. It says it is difficult to see strong growth in industrial investment - on which the durability of recovery depends - when there is much spare capacity and the returns on investment low in relation to borrowing bourne, aged 67, left the Bank of Mr Robin Leigh-Pemberton, from stockbuilding, and trends in external trades "seem to be adverse", with little growth in exports and much of the extra home demand syphoned off into imports. The Bank points out that since 1976 exports of manufactured goods have remained unchanged but imports have soared by 80 per cent.

On inflation, however, the Bank is more hopeful than many outside economists. Pointing out the big contribution made by lower pay deals to falling inflation over the last three years, the Bank rejects the conventional wisdom that settlements are likely to rise in the next pay round.

"It is clearly important that the trend to lower pay settlements should continue in the coming pay round", the Bulletin says. Lower inflation and continuing competitive pressures on companies meant there was a good chance of achieving "a further significant reduction in the level of settlements". The Bank estimates that despite the slowdown in earnings the real takehome pay for those still in work has risen by more than 3 per cent Although no figure for future settlements is given, the Bank clearly shares the views of the Confederation of British Industry and government ministers who would like to see pay rises down to Japanese and German levels of 2 or 3 per cent in the coming vage round.

"Given such restraint in wage settlements, the rate of price increases could progressively be brought down to level, which would then be capable of being maintained through a phase of recovery lasting several years."

Tidying the merger muddle

The hazy pragmatism of competition policy in Britain has been fast degenerating towards a shambles as recommendations were ignored from Sir Gordon Borrie, director general of Fair Trading, and the Monopolies and Mergers Commission was equally spurned.

Although predecessors had done their share of overturning such recommendations the problem seemed to grow most while Lord Cockfield was Secretary of State for Trade.

That is why yesterday's announcement by Mr Alexander Fletcher, minister responsible for corporate and consumer affairs. on competition policy is more than welcome. Mr Cecil Parkinson, the Trade and Industry Secretary, will accept the advice of both the OFT and the Commission whenever possible and, when he disagrees, will explain why, said Mr Fletcher.

This indication of return to following such advice in all but the most exceptional circumstances apparently the stance being adopted by Mr Parkinson - has come none too soon. There had been increasing signs of nervousness at both the OFT and the Commission on quite what might happen next when they made a recommendation.

In the new atmosphere both the OFT and the Commission should regain their former credibility although whether that will embolden them to get rid of the haziness about the application particularly of merger policy will remain to be seen.

Mr Fletcher has cleared up another point. No changes are proposed in competition legislation, he said. It means that the essential test of a merger will be that it is not against the public interest rather than introducing a more neutral stance. Such a would stance have implied the question whether a merger could be benefits.

It may not be the time to change legislation to enshrine that idea but Mr Parkingson might do well to make his attitude on this clear if only to indicate to companies how mergers with positive virtues could expect a fairer wind.

Investment income lifts invisibles

By John Lawless

Figures published yesterday show for the first time the full impact of the freeing of British exchange controls.

A report by the Committee on Invisible Exports shows that the surplus on investment income from abroad in 1981, the latest year for which figures are available, rose fourfold to $3,426m (£2,254m), from $805m in 1980. Controls were convertible into fully paid registered ordinary shares series B of 50 Swedish kronor each of the Company which are free shares for the purposes of the Swedish Companies Act 1975 ("B Shares")

> Conversion Right expires: 16th August, 1983 Redemption Date: 16th August, 1983

NOTICE OF REDEMPTION

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN to the holders of the Bonds that, in accordance with the Conditions endorsed on the Bonds ("the Conditions") and pursuant to the provisions of the trust deed dated 18th July, 1979 ("the Trust Deed") between the Company of the one part and The Law Debenture Corporation p.l.c. ("the Trustee") of the other part constituting the Bonds, the Company will on 16th August, 1983 redeem all of the Bonds then outstanding at the redemption price of 103 per cent. of their principal amount, together with interest accrued from and including 15th March, 1983 down to but excluding 16th August, 1983 amounting to U.S. $32.51 per Bond (that is to say an aggregate of U.S. $1,062.51 for each U.S. $1,000 principal amount of Bonds).

This Notice is given in accordance with Conditions 6 and 13. The condition precedent to the right of the Company so to redeem the Bonds, contained in Condition 6(b), has been satisfied since the Average Market Price (as defined in Condition 5(i)(2)) per B Share for the 30 consecutive business days on the Stockholm Stock Exchange commencing on 13th April, 1983 was at least 150 per cent. of the Conversion Price (as defined in Condition 5(a)) specified below in effect on the date of this Notice.

CONVERSION OR SALE ALTERNATIVE

It is provided in the Trust Deed and in the Conditions that any holder of Bonds may, as an alternative to redemption, exercise the right to convert the principal amount of his Bond(s) into B Shares but such right to convert must be exercised by the close of business at the specified office of the Conversion Agent (set out on the reverse of the Bonds and at the foot of this Notice) on 16th August, 1983. THE RIGHT TO CONVERT THE PRINCIPAL AMOUNT OF THE BONDS WILL THEREFORE TERMINATE ON 16th AUGUST, 1983 AT SUCH CLOSE OF BUSINESS.

Bonds may be converted into B Shares at the Conversion Price of Skr. 127.00 per B Share with the Bonds taken at their principal amount being translated into Swedish kronor at the fixed rate of U.S. $1 = Skr. 4.31125, resulting in a conversion rate of 33.94685 B Shares for each U.S. $1,000 principal amount of Bonds. As provided in the Conditions, any holder of Bonds who wishes to exercise his right to convert must obtain a Conversion Notice from the specified of fice of the Conversion Agent or of any Paying Agent (set out on the reverse of the Bonds and at the foot of this Notice), complete and sign the same in accordance with the instructions thereon and deposit it with his Bond(s), together with Coupon(s) No. 5 due 15th March, 1984 and all subsequent relative Coupons, at the specified office of the Conversion Agent at any time during normal business hours on or before 16th August, 1983. The Conversion Agent will require payment of an amount equal to the face value of any such Coupon not so deposited. A Bondholder delivering a Bond for conversion must pay all stamp, issue, registration or other similar taxes and duties (if any) which become payable by reason of the issue or delivery of the B Shares to be issued on such conversion to a person other than the converting Bondholder. Unless the Company determines that an exemption from the registration requirements of the United States Securities Act of 1933 is applicable, no Conversion Notice shall be effective unless it includes a certificate that the beneficial owner of the Bond being converted and of the B Shares to be issued upon conversion thereof is not a U.S. person and such Bond is not being converted with a view to, or in connection with, any offer or sale of such B Shares in the United States or to a U.S. person. For this purpose "United States" means the United States of America, its territories and possessions and all other areas subject to its jurisdiction and "U.S. person" means any national or citizen of, or person resident or normally resident in, the United States (including the estate of any such person), any corporation, partnership, trust or other entity organised under the laws of the United States or any political sub-division thereof and any branch or office in the United States of a foreign bank.

B Shares which are issued on conversion of any Bond on or after the date of this Notice will rank for all dividends the Record Date (as defined in Condition 5(i)(7)) for which falls on or after the Conversion Date (as defined in Condition 5(d)). B Shares issued upon conversion of any Bond the Conversion Date for which occurs during an ex Period (as defined in Condition 5(i)(4)) will not rank for the issue, distribution or offer for which the ex Period is established and the certificates in respect thereof shall be enfaced with a statement to that effect. Subject thereto B Shares issued on conversion of any Bond will rank pari passu in all respects with the B Shares in issue on the Conversion Date applicable to such Bond. No payment shall be made upon conversion for interest accrued on any Bond from and including 15th March, 1983. Fractions of a B Share will not be issued on conversion of Bonds but. when a fraction would otherwise fall to be issued, payment shall be made in U.S. dollars of an amount (converted at the fixed rate of U.S. $1 = Skr. 4.31125 and rounded to the nearest U.S. $0.01) equal to the appropriate fraction of the Conversion Price of a B Share on the relevant Conversion Date provided, however, that if more than one Bond shall be deposited for conversion at any one time by the same holder for conversion into one holding, the number of B Shares which shall be issued upon conversion thereof shall be calculated on the basis of the aggregate principal amount of the Bonds so deposited. Certificates for B Shares issued on conversion will be despatched free of charge to the converting Bondholder or other person designated in the instructions contained in the Conversion Notice in each case in accordance with such instructions (subject to any applicable exchange control or other regulations) at the risk of the Bondholder, normally within 20 business days after the Conversion Date together with (if appropriate) a cheque drawn on a bank in New York City in respect of any fractional entitlement. The Company will not be liable for any delay in effecting conversion for reasons outside the control of the Company or the Conversion Agent. The Company will use all reasonable endeavours to obtain a listing for the B Shares allotted on conversion on the Stockholm Stock Exchange, a stock exchange outside Sweden and on all other stock exchanges on which its B Shares are (pursuant to its

Pretax profits of Scottish & Newcastle Breweries rose nearly 28 per cent to £41.1m in the year to May vindicating the sharp upward re-rating the company's shares have enjoyed over the last year. But it is difficult to see how the company is going to move forward

S & N admits that there is little sign of a reversal in the declining or flat trend of the beer market. Indeed, it has identified long-term structural reasons why this should not

Last year it was willing to surrender market share to hold and improve on margins and with the notable exception of the north-east, its beer volume fell by possibly as much as 2 per cent more than the industry as a

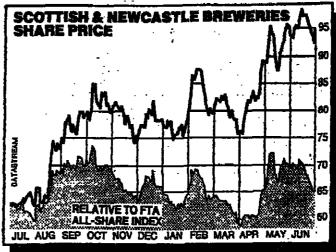

Volume was hit particularly hard in canned lager where there was a reversal of the deep discounting policy applied until

Throughout the free trade to which S & N has a much higher exposure than most big brewers only 20 per cent of its roduction sold through its own 1.500 tied houses - less emphasis is being put on low interest loans and more on discounting. The cheap loans are used as a method of persuading club owners to take one brand of beer in preference to another.

S & N has taken the opportunity afforded by this change to rationalize its loan portfolio and strip out some of the higher risk elements. But this has been achieved at the expense of some further decline in market share.

However, cost efficiencies have more than compensated or the fall in volume. In addition capital expenditure is now being kept well within cash flow with a consequent reduction in borrowings. This is eeding through to the profitand-loss account where last year there was a £4.3m reduction in borrowing costs to

Although both these factors vill continue to benefit results in the current year, which the company claims has begun with a small improvement in its market share, a clearly defined

Adds to that the group's known desire to make the rather uninspiring acquisition of the Hartlepool-based J W Cameron brewing company if Ellerman Lines is prepared to sell, and the prospects for the shares, in the short term at least, would be unexciting if they were not subject to regular bouts of takeover speculation.

Hampton's pretax profits fell to £2.45m from £3m on a turnover up from £8m to £10.4m.

Despite the profits fall, Hampton exceeded most expectations. Moreover, the current year looks promising. The company will have a full year's contribution from the Paringa Gold Mining joint venture at Kalgoorlie in Western Austra-lia, where it has a 20 per cent

International Competitive Tender for the Rehabilitation of the Grain Quay at Bizerta

Notice of Invitation to Prequalify

The Tunisian National Ports Authority intends implementing the rehabilitation and the extension of the grain quay at the port of Bizerta, in order to allow the handling of grain in ships of 50,000 DWT.

The works, financed by a loan from The World Bank and estimated to cost approximately 1 million Tunisian Dinars will be the subject of international competitive tendering for which there will be a prequalification of interested firms.

The works consist essentially of:

- the dredging of 430,000 m³ of sand
- the construction of three dolphins of 12 m diameter.

Firms wishing to be prequalified should submit their request by registered letter before 26 July 1983 at 12 noon to Monsieur le Président Directeur Général of the Tunisian National Ports Authority. Batiment Administratif, Port de la Goulette, Tunisie.

To be valid, requests for prequalification must comply with the prequalification documents, which can be obtained from the Technical Direction of the Tunisian National Michael Prest and John Lawless on the implications of unitary taxation

Headaches for multinationals as Americans maximize income

UNITARY TAX MAP OF THE UNITED STATES

BAT Industries had thought that its tax liability to the State of California for the last decade was agreed. But on Tuesday, less than 24 hours after the United States Supreme Court upheld the right of states to impose unitary taxation, California was requesting a review.

That "review" is but one of the many ramifications of California vs Container Corporation (a subsidiary of Mobil) which are causing headaches in boardrooms. If American states - and countries such as Nigeria or Brazil - also try to levy unitary taxes, the effect on corporate profits, financial structure and stock market ratings could be marked.

Unitary tax is a system whereby a government taxes a business within its jurisdiction on the percentage its operations represent of the worldwide turnover, profits or payroll of the group of which the business is part, rather than simply charge it on the profits declared

But the anguish is not ments of America's main trading partners, not least Britain as well as Japan and the Europen Community, are furious at what they regard as a dangerous threat to the international tax system. In White-hall, officials mutter that the United States federal govern-ment has not kept faith by failing to legislate against unitary taxation.

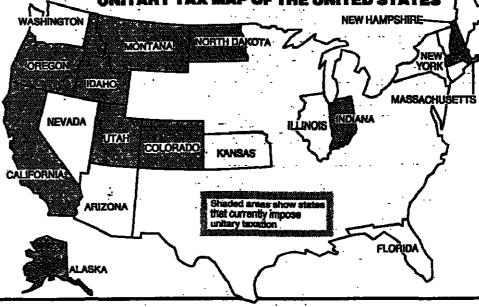

The issue could become another of those causes célèbres between Europe, Japan and the EEC an extension of rows about extraterritoriality, the Soviet gas pipeline, and technology trasfer. Yet it does have a basis in fact and theory.

And, ironically, it is possible that the attempt by states to augment their income through unitary taxation will backfire as companies move to locations with lower tax rates. Multinationals may now switch between American states as they do between Third World countries.

The proponents of unitary opportunities for big companies to shift their profits for tax purposes beyond the govern-ment's reach and so gives the people of state or country a fair share of the profits. The tax policies of multinationals have long been a sore point and have raised accusations of transfer pricings, exploitation of curency movements, and the like.

The counter argument is that it should be an axiom of tax law that nobody pays tax twice on the same unit of income. This is fundamental to the British tax system, and goes a long way to explain why the Inland Revenue placed so much emphasis in the mid-1970s on concluding the United States. That treaty was finally ratified in 1980. Similar treaties are in force with many countries and, it is maintained, enshrine official opposition to unitary taxation. If, therefore, unitary taxation was allowed to take hold, the financial position of international companies could be transformed. Higher taxes mean lower profits; that in turn means lower values for the heavily taxed assets; that could reduce the asset side of balance sheets and so affect gearing, and all these developments should be reflected in share prices. Investors might sell equity in affected

> UK industrialists say federal legislation is the solution

Far from setting a precedent, it now appears that the unitary tax system is going to rebound on states who take their tax profits today at the expense of tomorrow's industrial invest-

"It is perfectly logical that companies will simply decide to locate elsewhere." Mr Gerry Ball, tax consultant with the American accountancy firm of Arthur Anderson, said.

He spoke at a seminar at the US embassy on Tuesday - a seminar designed to look at the whole question of US investment - and found himself pinned to the wall by questions over unitary tax from an audience of 100 British firms which had just heard of the Supreme Court decision. Mr John Liddiard, deputy foreign investment, from Japan Industries, agreed. "Where there is a choice between and Asia generally," he said. "That's where it draws most "Where investing in the 10 or 11 states "Illinois is another state that has removed itself, in its case which have unitary taxation, and others that do not, clearly completely, from the list of companies will sky away from states imposing unitary tax."

states which have it," he said.

BAT has 36 per cent of its assets in the US, and that market provided 45 per cent of its trading profit and 27 per cent companies - a move adopted by of turnover. The unitary tax "affects us mainly on tobacco," said Mr Liddiard. "The Barclay cigarette we sell in California is follows: Alaska, California, Colorado, Idaho, Indiana, the same as we make elsewhere.

"We thought we had agreed our tax liability with California, but the Revenue has now reopened the calculation. This judgment strengthens its hand cause it establishes that unitary taxation is not unconsti-

Mr Ball added: "All decisions regarding the location of a factory are a complex mix." The two most important are personal and family considerations, and marketing.

"But if you are going to locate on the United States West Coast, there is no real reason why you shouldn't put your factory into Oregon, next to California, and truck your goods into the big market."

Most significant of all is a Bill at present going before the Oregon legislature which proposes to remove unirary tax from companies during the first five years of their operations.
"What is most infuriating to companies is to be making losses during their start-up period and still find themselves paying taxes," explained Mr Ball. "The first five years is also when it's at its most punitive."

His firm has been advising Oregon on its moves. "Oregon is obviously concerned about omic Development Authority, "Kansas does not attract industry will go out of their way not to jump onto the unitary tax bandwagon, "Mr George Borey director of international client service at accountants Alexander Grant,

.The unitary system is of greater concern to British industrialists than any other foreigners. Last year, Kingdom firms supplied 63 new manufacturing plants in the US (36 of them on the East Coast) against 44 from Japan, 41 from West Germany, 37 from Canada and 19 from France. That was out of an annual total, for the US as a whole, of 271.

The competition to get jobcreating factories from abroad has been intensifying. In 1981 there were 348 new plants from abroad, and in 1980 there had

These circumstances have led the British lobbying group, which represents some 60 companies, to argue that federal legislation is the only solution. Intense diplomatic pressure is likely to be directed at the US administration which, in the shape of the US Treasury, is sympathetic to the opponents of unitaty tax. An "amicus curiae" brief was filed by the govern-ment in the California vs Container Corporation case.

The object of this pressure will be to push through indentical bills which at present stand before the House of Representatives and the Senate. But gloomy Whitehall sources claim that only the threat of retaliation will stir Uncle Sam and Capitol Hill into action.

The bope, nevertheless, is that the question can be resolved before cases brought by Shell and Thorn-EMI come before the Supreme Court Nobody wants another wideranging international dispute, and no company finance director wants to dig out the files of a decade ago.

Given this sound base, Campbell could torment the All Blacks, not only through his goal-kick-ing, but also through his ability to place his tactical punts accurately for the greater dis-comfort of Allan Hewson, the All Black full-back. The last time Hewson played in blizzard conditions at Carisbrook two years ago he had to be led away suffering from exposure and he could suffer in this match, either from the icy blast, or Campbell's relentless boot.

Rutherford will play in the inside centre position, rather then interchange with Kiernan, and his ability to kick long and high will give the Lions another attacking option. His home crowd may prove to be the only incentive that Phil Brown needs to do well in the 400 metres after his disappointments in Edinburgh and Oslo. He seemed exhausted after a week's training abroad just before Edinburgh and his blocks stipped as he pushed off in Oslo, causing him to stumble and lose too much ground.

The Birmingham crowd might do as muych for their Alexander Stadium as for the athletes. It seems that the crowd in Edinburgh last weekend was only around 7,000 for the first British permit meeting. morning's play which was irritating, especially from a New Zealand point of view. Barring two Test matches against Sri Lanka, the New Zealanders' cricket has been limited to a strict diet in overs. So, being a little unprepared in three-day cricket, they looked foreward to a full two days here as they prepare for nine meetings around the counties, and four Test matches against England.
All-round disappointment on one of those infuriating uncricketing-like days was to some extent offset by the excellence of the hospitality and for that we could doff our hats to Watney, Mann and Truman, the brewers, who sponsor inter-service

Certainly, Combined Services who had won the toss and chosen to bat found fortitude and inspiration in an excellent luncheon. De Caries and Clark showed their appreciation as they settled in comfortably against the bowling of Snedden and Chatfield.

A pale green strip was only a shade different from the table either side and not far removed from an apple green outfield. Indeed, it has been some years now since the colour and texture of pitches here has blended with the buff brick building - formerly the Nuffield Club - to one side of the ground.

Mrs King was crushed by the weight of 39 birthdays, by a worn court that took some of the sting from her shots and by a flawless performance from a youngster who was clearly going to do something like this to someone like Mrs King somewhere sometime Miss Vermaak, who had beaten no player seeded higher than twelfth, was simply

A worn court takes enough pace off the ball to give groundstroke specialists more of a chance than is usual on fast grass. The manner of Miss Jaerer's success was a reminder of 1966 when the big hitters had to concede much of the limelight to those more accus-tomed to manoeuvring for witted anticipation. Yesterday her service and overhead were both impressive, indicating that she is learning her trade on grass. She used the court well and in the second set there came a time when, whereas Mrs King was making mistakes that were not even forced on her, Miss Jaeger seemed to have lost the normal human capacity for error. She was not using a racket any more: it was more of a conductor's baton, dictating the tempo and mood of the match.

There is not much to be said about the second singles. Miss Vermaak, who was playing her ninth Wimbledon, knows what to do on grass but - at this level o lacks the qualities to do it. She was neither quick enough to contain Miss Navratilova not strong enough to attack her.

Miss Navratilova is the greatest player of her type since Margaret Court. The power of her game was so slickly disciplined that it seemed as underrating Miss Jaeger. i riais are rescued by sponsor

By Jenny MacArthur

The Wylye international three day event, whose future looked uncertain after the withdrawal of the Midland Bank last year, has found a new sponsor in the Plessey Company. The event, held annually at the Wiltshire home of Lord and Lady Hugh Russell since 1961, taken Lady Hugh Russell since 1961, takes place this year from September 29 to October 2.

Lord Hugh Russell said yesterday that the sponsorship has given the organizers the confidence and the backing to proceed with their plans for this year's event - plans which include the building of a grandstand around the main arena.

Although the three-day event is an international one, the popularity of three-day eventing on the Continent and the growth of events such as Kalmthout (Belguim) and Luhmuhlen (West Germany) has reduced the number of foreign reduced the number of foreign competitors wanting to compete in Britain. Wydye are hoping to change this by offering assistance to foreign teams with their travel expences, an offer made possible by Plessey's financial backing Provided there is a minimum of three teams, a team competition will be held.

The junior international times day event will not take place this year, but the Courage driving trials, started last year, will also come under the sponsorship of Plessey.

IN BRIEF

MOTOR CYCLING: Franco Uncini, of Italy, who was seriously hurt in Saturday's Dutch Grand Prix, is progressing well but will remain in the Groningen University Hospital for another week, doctors said yesterday. They said Uncini, aged 28, who regained consciousness on Sunday, could move all his limbs.

BOXING: Lucio Cusma, of Italy, had a good last round to retain his European lightweight title against Rene Weller, of West Germany, in Brolo, flooring his opponent to draw level on points in the 12-round contest. His tactics paid off when 2 left jab caught Weller full in the face to send the German sprawling but Cosma was be then too tired to RUGBY LEAGUE: Wigan have signed the 17-year-old scrum half, Keith Holden, son of the former Wigan, Leigh, and Oldham intena-tional centre who played in the 1950s and early 1960s.

FOOTBALL: Barcelona beat Real Madrid 2-1 to win Spain's first League Cup and complete a double over their arch rivals after beating them in the Spanish Cup final last month. First-half goals form Maradona and Alesanco paved the way for Barcelona's victory. A brilliant goal by Metgod nine minutes from the end was not enough to save Real. The sides drew 2-2 in the first leg of the final in Madrid on Sunday.

Fuel economy is keynote of new Renault 11

The battle for sales in the small medium car sector intensifies today with the arrival in Britain of the new Renault 11 hatchback. It will compète against such home produced models as the BL Maestro, Ford Escort and Vauxhall Astra. Renault has high hopes for the car, pointing out that this is the astest growing sector of the market and one in which "two-box" or hatchback models account for more than 70 per cent of sales. The target for the R11 is 23,000 units a year, or between one quarter and one third of all Renault's British

Although the external styling carefully disguises the fact, the R11 is mechanically similar to the Renault 9 saloon. There is a choice of 1108cc and 1397cc engines, transversely mounted and driving the front wheels, and of four and five-speed and automatic gear-boxes. Suspension is independent

At 13ft the car is slightly shorter than the R9. It has a sharply sloped bonnet and low, wide, grille with four rectangular halogen head-lamps, while the rear is similar to the shape of the of the Renault Fuego with a wide, "bubble" window forming part of the tailgate.

The rear seat can be folded forward to increase load space and on the more expensive versions it is rate, batchbacks have been outsplit one-thirds/two-thirds, allowing more combinations of passengers and luggage. Inherited from the R9 are the "monotrace" front seats, which adjust for tilt as well as the Volkswagen Jetta came after the volkswagen Jetta came after the usual rake and reach. Initially five versions of the R11 are being sold in Britain. The range starts with the three-door 1100 at £4,350 and the other models all have the 1400 engine, combined with three- or five-door bodyshells. At the top of the range is the TSE at £5,975. The "talking" car, similar to the Maestro will come later. Though the R9 was voted Car of the Year, it was, by Renault standards, an unexceptional and straightforward design in which ride comfort was, to an extent, sacrificed for crisper handling. Initial impressions suggest that the model marked a return to Renault's traditional softer ride but since the auspension systems on the two models are the same, there is no obvious reason for this. None of the versions so far available is a particularly brisk performer, the emphasis being rather on good fuel consumption and low maintenance costs. The official Government figures imply that drivers, except on the automatic, should average 40 mpg and better, which is excellent for the The arrival of the R11 means the small medium hatchback, the Renault 14. As for the new car, it is bound to like ride, handling and interior space. But it was quieter and more revive the argument about the rival comfortable than, say, a Land merits of hatchbacks and "three-Rover, and a lot cheaper. box" saloons with separate boots.

I have just returned to the In the light medium sector the Subaru and the recently-introduced hatchback seems to have won the top of the line estate that aspires not so much to beat the Land ably because owners prefer its versatility as a load carrier. At any Rover as its luxurious cousin the Range Rover. It has power steering, automatic transmission, electric windows and other refinements and although some of the old criticisms remain, it is a vastly better car. Although unlike the manual version the automatic offers only one set of gear ratios, the car copes capably with a variety of off-road conditions, such as sharp inclines,

The automatic transmission

As the official figures (see table) indicate, the car is little more economical on the open road than in town and a clue to this is the gearing, nearly 4,000 rpm at 70 mph in top (although engine noise at this speed is less than might be thought and overall the car is acceptably quiet.

With power assistance the steering is light enough, but it still suffers from that characteristic Japanese vagueness which can be disconcerting in cross winds. The ride, if on the firm side, is a distinct improvement over the previous Subaru I drove. The seats are better shaped with, in the front, adjustable lumbar support.

The introduction of a raised, or

"twrtt' roof has increased headroom for backseat passengers, though legroom remains tight. The tailgate lifts up easily on a low, wide loading platform, unencumbered by the spare wheel which is sensibly stowed under the bonnet and suffering only modest intrusion from the rear suspension units.

It is a well appointed car, with a useful bank of warning lights, a steering wheel that adjusts for height and washers for the headlamps. The ventilation system looked impressive but in humid weather it was often necessary to open the windows.

The quickest from a standing start

Who makes the world's fastest accelerating car? The question may be answered at Bembridge Airport on the Isle of Wight on Sunday contenders are being timed over quarter of a mile from a standing

The cars, which are privately owned and will be driven by motoring journalists, are (in alphabetical order): the Aston Martin V8 Vantage, De Thomaso Pantera GT5, Ferrari Boxer 512 BBi, Jaguar XJ-S HE, Lamborghini Countach, Lotus Turbo Espirit and Porsche Turbo.

They are expected to cover the distance in 12 to 13 seconds, while reaching a speed of around 120 mph, and the winner may be in the next Guiness Book of Records, which has said it is willing to recognise the result. The event, one of the attractions of the Isle of Wight County Fair, starts at 2.40

Fast accelerating cars usually have high top speeds as well and it is no surprise to see the seven models at the top of the league table contained in the 1983 edition of admirable reference book World Cars. Mary Morris in Seaton's Aunt (ITV, 10.30pm)

◆ Chacun a son goût, philosophizes the ghastly relative in SEATON'S AUNT (ITV, 10.30pm) as she forks the lobster mayomalse between her thin lips, watched gloomily by her nephew who is convinced she is an old hag, in league with the Devil. If you know your Walter de la Mare, you will know that it is a vision of a very different kind of repast that the young led fixes in his mind when he thinks of his aunt. "She's living off me - a cannibal feast - and she's a spider", he confides to his school chum. De la Mare wrote what looks to me like a perfectly shaped story about possession, with a tragic and sensible resolution. Ken Taylor, writer of tonight's screenplay, obviously finds the original ending factory because he has tacked on a few pages from another de la Mare story, The at 10.55. Wimbledon: The big event of the day is, of course, the semi final in the Men's Singles. We see live coverage and, at 10.20 tonight there are highlights. Commentary by Dan Maskell, John Barrett, Barry Davies, Mark Cox, Ann Jones, Virginia Wade, Bill Threlfell and Richard Evans.

7.40 News: with subtitles. And weather prospects.

7.45 Civilisation: Re-run of this highly praised 13-part series in which the late Kenneth Clark defined what western civilisation meant to him. The ilms were first screened 14 years ago. Tonight's film, The Skin of Our Teeth, covers the Dark Ages - roughly from 400AD to 1000AD. There is a brief introduction about the Graeco-Roman world, and why it collapsed (r). (See

8.35 Gardeners' World: From Barndale in Rutland. Clematis expert Raymond Evison shows us some new varieties and offers some advice on the best time to prune - and how to do it. Also, a progress report on Geoff Hamilton's organic garden; and Mary Spiller wages war on pests and weeds. 9.00 My Music: Steve Race. in the chair and a the piano, puts questions to Denis Norden, lan Wallace, Frank Muir and John Amis, all of whom, ultimately, have to sing for their supper.

9.25 Maybury: Second and final part of Douglas Watkinson's story about an epileptic, New Gods for Old. Tonight's instalment sees the young sufferer, (Kenneth Branagh) enrolling in college and rriving at his new digs which he has to share with a girl (Cathryn Harrison). But there is still much more work for his /Patrick Stewarth to do on him before he can come to terms Rogers and Liea Tremontin.

10.20 Wimbledon 83: Highlights from today's play in the semi-finals of the Men's Singles. And there is expert comment on the prospects for tomorrow's big event - the final of the Ladies' Singles. With Desmond Lynam and Gerald Williams. 11.05 Newsnight: Bulletins and analysis from the usual team, headed by John Tusa, Peter Snow and Donald MacCormick, Ends at 12.00 approximately.

8,30 Jack London's Tales on the Klondlice: Finis. The final tale in this series of dramas, narrated by Orson Wells. Stechen McHattle stars as the gold prospector in desperate straits. Frozen, suffering from scurvy, without food, without sled or dogs, he hits upon a murderous plan of survival. He will lie in wait with his only useful possession, his rifle, waiting for three men, carrying rolls of money, who are expected to pass along the trail. 9.40 Tilt: Dancing, songs and musical jokes, in a melange from Italy that relies heavily on technical trickery.

10.00 Cheers: Comedy series set in a Boston saloon bar. Tonight a television commercial agent (Barbara Babcock) makes Sam (Ted Danson) an offer he cannot refuse. He relishes the prospect of recapturing the ittention of the Americ public after being out of the imelight for so long.

10.30 Benjamin Zephaniah - Pen Rhythm Poet. A film about the young Rastalarian poet and musician, born in Birmincham spent two years in jail and is stage performances. 11.30 Film: Performance (1970) Much praised, and much distiked drama, starring James Fox as the victous gangster on the run who moves in with a former pop star (Mick Jagger) who shares a flat with two girls (Anita Pallenberg and Michele Breton). Co-starring John Sindon, Allan Cuthbertson and Anthony Valentine. Directors: Nicolas Roeg, Donald Cammell, Ends at 1.25.

FRIDAY JULY 1 1983

Rome (Reuter, AFP)-Cardinal Jozef Glemp, Roman Catholic Primate of Poland, expressed hope yesterday that martial law would be lifted this month, and confirmed that a dialogue between church and state was in progress.

The primate, asked on his arrival in Rome about reports that the Governmen might lift martial law on July 22, replied: "One thinks so, one thinks so". He added: "I believe the church would want it but these are political questions I have no part in".

The cardinal and three bishops are in Rome to confer with the Pope on the impact of the latter's visit to Poland. Cardinal Glemp replied with a firm "no" to journalists asking if the church favoured the replacement of Mr Lech Walesa as leader of the barred trade union, Solidarity.

● WARSAW: General Woj-ciech Jaruzelski, the Polish leader, has told a senior Western parliamentarian that martial law could be lifted as early as July 22, but it may have to be postponed until December (Roger Boyes writes).

In a private meeting with Señor José Federico de Carvajal, president of the Spanish senate. General Jaruzelski said he hoped that the church leadership would issue a declaration that would make the lifting of martial law easier.

He said that three factors would influence the date: the analysis of the Pope's visit to Poland being prepared by the joint church-state commission; Cardinal Glemp's visit to the Vatican and the Government's own assessment of the internal sability of Poland. The Polish Government, the general emphasized, would not be influence by outside pressures.

General Jaruzelski told the Spanish politician, who is the highest-ranking parliamentarian from the West to visit Poland since martial law was imposed 18 months ago, that there could be unrest on August 31, the anniversary of the Gdansk agreement of 1980 which effectively created Solidarity. This was one of the many elements that had to be

An issue cloaked in mystery floors MPs

With the new Parliament already over a week old, the search was on yesterday for an

Mrs Thatcher arrived for her second Prime Minister's question time. There was not an issue in sight. Mr Michael. Foot was slumped on the bench opposite her, patiently awaiting the elegiac years with Hazlitt, Dizzy the dog, and Mrs Foot the feminist - years that will be his after October.

The Tories sat massed behind her. The only issues they have, at this stage of the Parliament, are capital punishment and who should be chairman of the 1922 Committee. Both are delicate matters of conscience on which most of them would not wish to comment in public unless it were unavoidable. In any case, it was up to the Opposition to produce issues.

Mr Jeffrey Rooker, a Labour expert on social security, had the first question to the Prime Minister. " Does she believe that families of the unemployed, and the unemployed, should be able to purchase the same amount of food, fuel and clothing from their unemployment benefit one year compared with another? Yes or no?"

This had about it the air of a trick question. So Mrs Thatcher paused before answering "That will depend very much on their choice of foods and the movement in prices", she said.

She went on to say that this year food prices increased by only I per cent. But she was all but drowned out by Labour cries of outrage, by Labour members all but strangling one another in order to be the first shout "let them eat cake"; and by Mr Eric Heffer, on the Opposition front bench, ex-claiming: "You just don't understand, do you? God Almighty. Dear, oh dear, you just don't understand".

Of one thing, then, we could be certain; there was no issue. What Mrs Thatcher had said was manifestly unexceptionable. And one suspects that most Labour members knew it. In further exchanges, she observed - again, unexceptionably - that the way people used "their national insurance and supplementary benefit is wholly a matter for their choice" This provoked additional Labour expressions of routine outrage. For in their theology the unemployed are supposed not to have such a thing as choice, being helpless creatures whose only hope is to await the return of a Labour government. This could explain why at the election more than half of them are understood to have voted Tory.

Earlier. Mrs Peggy Fenner, the Parliamentary Secretary for Agriculture, announced an order enabling the Govern-ment to restrict the movement of racing pigeons. As an issue, this seemed more promising.
Mrs Fenner said it was because of an outbreak of disease among these birds. But pigeon racing, particu-larly up north, would presumably be affected, one thought Some of us saw the possibility of a massive Labour attack on the Torics for introducing, less than a month after winning a new mandate, blatant class legislation. Mrs Fenner said there would be the full collaboration of the "Royal Pigeon Racing Association".

But this sounded like the Establishment body of the sport. Sure enough, Dr Mark Hughes, from the Labour front bench, said the veterinary evidence was "question-able". He demanded more evidence

Pigeon racing, under some dour Yorkshire sky, is the sort of subject one associates with the ubiquitous pen of Mr Roy Hattersley. But yesterday he was otherwise engaged, searchon a White Paper about cable television. ing for an issue in the debate

He was in favour of cable television, it seemed, but only if some public body did most of the organizing. He is rather high-minded on such occasions. He called on the Minister "to attempt to essay an answer to my question" the phrase to attempt to essay" being Mr Hattersley's way of saying "to try".

Finally, to Mr Richard Alexander, the Conservative member for Newark, who though elected in 1979, protested to the Leader of the House Mr Biffen, yesterday on behalf of new members' bad living conditions. "Yesterday I saw an hon member. whose name and party I did not know, who felt obliged to work from the floor of the cloakroom." he said.

At last, an issue: On the other hand, Mr Alexander should not have assumed that, just because a member was sprawled on the floor of the ly working.
